Great Lakes Selects a WURLITZER Organ after thorough investigation

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Co.,
674 Main Street,
Buffalo, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

We feel that a note of appreciation is due you for the wonderful organ that you installed in our theatre. The matter of selecting the proper instrument for this theatre was one of great concern to us and no time or money was spared in making our decision. That our judgment was correct in the selecting of the Wurlitzer organ is evident by the results that have been achieved.

We honestly believe something would be lacking in our theatre without this wonderful instrument.

Yours very truly,

W. M. Liddison

Another BOWERS COMEDY that's

"even better than 'THERE IT IS'.. and that is saying a pageful"

"WHOOZIT"

An exhibitor is lagging behind if he overlooks a number like this Charley Bowers example of how comedy can be made more effective with just the right amount of novelty and mystification. It's the best Bowers comedy we've seen, even better than "There It Is," and that is saying a pageful when you consider how good that Bowers comedy was.

Have you ever seen an oyster walk? Have you ever beheld a cockroach throw china? We had never seen these things done before until we viewed "Whoozit" and now we believe that anything is possible—in a Charley Bowers comedy. More amazing than Aladdin's lamp or the magic genii are these mysterious creations which Bowers introduces occasionally along the route of his comedy. Bowers has also utilized the idea of a menace always pursuing, always threatening. This menace is somewhat similar to the "Fuzz Faced Phantom" in "There It Is." Bowers imagines he is being sought after by this menace. He imagines all sorts of things—the oysters walking, the roaches hurling saucers. These wild phantasmagoria are the result of gas which Bowers has deeply inhaled. While in his drugged state his mind rivals that of an opium eater's for the procession of events coursing through it of which he is the fantastic central figure.

Decidedly different; a first-rate, cracker jack novelty.

Wanted: Good Pictures

An Exhibitor Analysis of What's Wrong With Production

By William A. Johnston

IT won't be long before Hollywood will again be in full swing on the product for next season. Soon, also, the sales drives will open up on the exhibitor.

Will the pictures for next season be better than they were this year? We shall see. Meanwhile, an exhibitor analysis of what's wrong with production is interesting—at this time, particularly.

The latest communication we have received, along this line, is from M. H. Bryer, of the Akron Theatre Co., Akron, Ohio, who writes:

"Your editorial in the March 17th issue, 'Time to Wake Up,' had a lot of good common sense in it, but I disagree with you when you say that pictures this year are as good as ever. They are decidedly not. Outside of a few outstanding box-office bets, the balance are terrible. I believe the greatest fault with them is the thin, trashy stories. The public loses interest in them before they are half through and go home dissatisfied. I have asked dozens of people why they don't go to the movies anymore and most of them say they would rather sit at home and listen to the good radio programs or play bridge than go to the movies.

"You can't fool the public. They know their movies and can't be enticed to see an average picture regardless of how much noise you make about them.

"Another trouble with pictures this season is: the market is flooded with comedies and the public wants to see serious dramas. Every comedy we showed has been a decided flop. The people want melodrama or sob stuff. They don't seem to be in a laughing mood this year. I believe Jesse Lasky sensed this situation, too, because he made a statement recently that he is going to produce just this kind of pictures for next season.

"I don't believe the unemployment in this country is so much to blame for the bad show business. Working conditions in Akron are pretty good and still our records show us we are doing as poor a business as we did in the slump of 1921 and 1922.

"The vaudeville houses in this town are doing good, but after checking up I find that people go there because if they show a bad picture, they can walk out on it and feel that, at least, they got their money's worth by seeing six acts of vaudeville.

"I believe there are only two things that can bring the public back to the theatres again. First, a number of real pictures with plots that keep them glued to their seats or make them cry. And, second, a novelty like talking pictures.

"Without the Vitaphone, 'The Jazz Singer' would have been only another movie, but Jolson's singing got under their skins and they felt as if it was the greatest performance they had ever witnessd. I know it got me when I saw it. I just wanted to applaud and shout my approval, I was so enthused. This can be repeated with the various new devices on the market now. However, there is one thing the producers must remember and that is, the little fellows cannot break their necks installing expensive equipment for these productions. They'll have to find outfits that are within the reach of all of us.

"All this talk about the producers clipping production costs is wonderful if they go ahead and do it. There are too many 'Yes

Paramount Famous Lasky Shows Net Profit of $8,057,997 for Year

IN its consolidated statement, which includes subsidiary company earnings, Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation shows net profits for the year 1927 of $8,057,997. In this amount are included net profits of $2,407,570 for the three months ended December 31st.

The yearly figures include $786,000, Paramount's undistributed share of earnings of Balaban & Katz Corporation, a 65 per cent owned subsidiary. Earnings for 1927 were 44 per cent greater than those for 1926.

After allowing for payment of dividends on the preferred stock, which was outstanding during 1927, but which was retired on February 1, 1928, the profits amount to $3.84 for the three months and $12.85 for the twelve months on the average number of shares of common stock outstanding. This compares with $10.82 and $3.14 a share earned for the 1926 year and fourth quarter, respectively, on a smaller outstanding capitalization.

Warners Lose Appeal On Abritration

Minneapolis Court Holds Company Can Be Refused Arbitration Unless Complying With Board Rulings

WARNER BROS. have lost their appeal in the arbitration case against Hans Pederson, a Jamestown, N. D., exhibitor, according to word from Minneapolis. The district court has denied the plea of the company asking that the court enjoin the arbitration board from refusing to arbitrate company cases.

Warners refused to abide by an arbitration decision handed down by the board, claiming that the decision was unfair and illegal and promptly appealed for a decision from the district court. As a result of the action of the company in its refusal to comply, exhibitors in the organization declared a walkout from arbitration and threatened a disruption of the whole system.

A general controversy ensued and W. A. Steffes, Northwest unit president, announced that the members of the organization would no longer arbitrate. In an effort to straighten out the difficulty the Film Board of Trade appealed to the Mayor and members of the Civic and Commerce Association to appoint exhibitor arbitrators. These civic officials and public spirited leaders refused to involve themselves into the proceedings unless they were requested to do so by both sides of the controversy. Unaffiliated exhibitors approached on the matter of arbitration are said to have refused emphatically.

The decision of the district court is regarded by W. A. Steffes as one of the most important developments since arbitration was instituted and one that will materially strengthen the powers of arbitration boards as distributors, according to the court verdict, will have no ground for appeal and unless they abide by board rulings will be refused the privilege of arbitration hearings before boards.

In discussing the case Mr. Steffes said:

"This decision emphasizes the fact that distributors must abide by and comply with arbitration decisions under penalty of disbarment from arbitration. Distributors have the means of forcing exhibitor compliance with decisions, and this decision shows that exhibitors also have enforcement power. The decision greatly strengthens arbitration."

New Jersey Senators Kill Padlock Bill

THE proposed New Jersey theatre padlock ordinance met defeat in the Senate this week after the bill had passed the Assembly. The state exhibitor association, headed by Joseph M. Seider, brought home to the members of the Senate the unfair provisions of the bill, which Miss Haynes, sponsor of the censor bill of the last session, introduced.

The bill specified that the producer, exhibitor or advertiser of a salacious film would have been guilty of a misdemeanor.

R. T. Cranfield Passes After Sudden Illness

After a brief illness Richard T. Cranfield, president of Cranfield-Clarke, passed away on Wednesday, March 28th, 1928, at his home in long Island. He leaves behind him his wife, a son and a daughter. He was 53 years old.

The burial took place at 2:30 o'clock on March 30th in Maple Grove Cemetery in Kew Gardens. The deceased was buried with Masonic rites and in his Knight Templar uniform.

Canadians Re-elect J. A. Cooper to Head Unit

Although he was not present through incapacitation from injuries received in a train accident a month ago, Col. John A. Cooper of Toronto was re-elected president and secretary-treasurer of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada at a meeting of the 1928 directors of the association immediately following the annual congress of the organization at Toronto on March 27. P. C. Taylor, general manager of F. B. O. Pictures Corporation of Canada, Limited, presided as chairman of the meeting.

Elected directors, following the receipt of annual reports, were: Representing film distributors: Arthur Cohen, Regal Films; Clair Hague, Canadian Universal; O. R. Hanson, Canadian Educational; R. S. Bell, First National; B. F. Lyon, Warner Bros.; M. A. Milligan, Famous-Lasky.

Representing exhibtors: Clarence Robson, Famous Players Canadian, and John Arthur, Uptown Theatre, Toronto. Representing members: J. P. O'Loghlin, Fox, and P. C. Taylor, F. B. O. as well as Mr. Cooper, who was elected by the other directors.

Charge "Country Store" Operations Are Violations

Information has been filed against the operators of the Queen Theatre and the Rivoli Theatre of Denver charging that their "country store" operations are a violation of a state law prohibiting lottery. A month ago A. Dickson and F. H. Ricketson were freed by directed verdict in the West Side court, when they were tried for the same offense. It apparently is the opinion of the District Attorney that the directed verdict was the result of incomplete evidence..

The method of conducting the "country stores" by both theatres, was to give away tickets to the general public regardless whether a ticket to the show was purchased. The theatre owners contend that no numbers are sold; that the numbers are given.

Father of "U" Executive Dies Suddenly

Maurice Singerman, the father of Sydney Singerman, head of the program department of Universal Pictures, died suddenly the evening of Sunday last from a severe heart attack. He has been suffering intermittently for over a year.

A Tribute to J. S. Dickerson

The tribute of The Film Daily printed in its issue of April 5, follows:

"A strong counsellor and a worthy associate has been lost by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. In the death of J. S. Dickerson, innumerable exhibitors throughout the nation have lost a champion. Drawing upon his extensive background as an old-time showman, Dickerson recognized the many problems of the exhibitor and, drawing up that knowledge, did much with William A. Johnston to shape the same, constructive editorial policy which has always been characteristic of the NEWS.

"We voice our regrets at an untimely passing."

J. S. Dickerson Dies of Pneumonia

Motion Picture News Executive Passes Away After Week's Illness; An Outstanding Figure in Trade Paper Field

J. S. DICKERSON, Associate Editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and for many years an outstanding executive in the trade publication field, died Tuesday night, April 3, after a week's illness with pneumonia, at his home in Linden, N. J. He was 46 years old, and since 1920 had been one of the stalwarts of the NEWS organization.

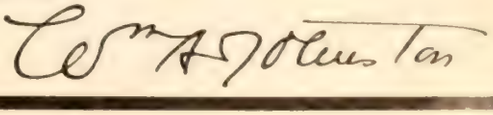
For the second time within a few months, the NEWS is bowed in sorrow over the loss of a member of its family. Fred J. Beecroft, who was our advertising manager for many years, passed away in December.

"Dick" was ill two years ago with pneumonia, but he returned to duty apparently fully recovered and devoted himself with his usual tireless energy to the interests of the NEWS. His passing came as a great shock to his associates and the industry.

Born in Watkins, N. Y., "Dick" at an early age became a newspaper man, and subsequently, after business experience in mercantile lines, entered the industry as an exhibitor. For some ten years, he successfully conducted several theatres in upper New York State, and gained there the background which enabled him to rise to the top of his profession in the trade paper field.

He joined the NEWS eight years ago as the Editor of the Exhibitors Service Bureau and then succeeded Robert E. Welsh as Managing Editor. Three years ago, "Dick" began a work which had never before been undertaken in this publication field—the analysis of exhibition from the statistical and economic viewpoints Here he became a specialist, and the information and knowledge which he assembled with unceasing patience and energy is one of the most valuable assets of the NEWS today. He was consulted inside and outside the industry as the expert in this field. Within recent months, his work was recognized as authoritative by the School of Business Administration at Harvard University in its industrial study of the motion picture.

Services were held at the Ogden Funeral Parlors in Elizabeth, N. J., on Thursday afternoon, after which the body was taken to Union Springs, N. Y., for interment in the family plot. Surviving are his wife and three children, and his sister and aged mother. The services at Elizabeth were attended by a very large group of associates and friends and the profusion of floral tributes marked the esteem in which "Dick" was held.



Scores of messages of condolence and sorrow have been received by the NEWS over the passing of this well-beloved, earnest and loyal man, whose qualities of mind and heart endeared him to all. He was one of the most important of the builders of this publication and stood second in command to "The Chief"—William A. Johnston.

J. S. DICKERSON was so close and true a friend of mine that I can only, just now, feel the shock of a personal loss, so great that it seems irreparable. But this industry, too, has lost a man that cannot be replaced.

Like other conscientious and able workers whose names do not get into the headlines, he made a most important contribution to an activity he really loved. I believe he stood alone in his comprehensive and detailed knowledge of the picture theatres of this country. And it is so regrettable that he could not have lived to have seen some of his plans come true and to have received the honors at least that were due him.

In this office, where he labored so long and so well, his name and the memories of him will be highly treasured.

Butterfield Circuit Seeks 25 Mile Area of Protection

THE Butterfield Circuit of Michigan houses, in which Publix is a partner, is seeking 30 days picture protection over an area of twenty-five miles. There are 75 theatres in the chain, which is confined largely to the lower peninsula of Michigan, but which it is contemplated expanding to the upper peninsula.

Among the cities included in the chain are, Ann Arbor, Battle Creek, Bay City, Flint, Grand Rapids, Hillsdale, Ionia, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Lansing, Owosso, Pontiac, Port Huron, Saginaw, Ypsilanti, Adrian, Alpena, Benton Harbor, Big Rapids, Cadillac, Grand Haven, Ludington, Mainstee, Niles, St. Joseph, Three Rivers and Traverse City.

If this wide range of protection is granted it will effect nearly every theatre in the territory.

Film Boards Doing Much Charity Work

THE annual report of the Film Board of Trade for the year 1927, released through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, shows an abundance of effective work done by the organization during the year. Not the least of this was devoted to charity in the showing of motion pictures.

According to the report the film boards provided free entertainment to nearly one thousand institutions for orphans, to soldiers still confined from injuries in the war, to homes for old folks and in both state and federal penitentiaries. The total number of pictures shown without cost in these institutions was 22,165, of which more than 12,000 were feature pictures being shown concurrently in local theatres.

As a consequence of these showings it is calculated that more than 170,000 inmates of the various institutions and hospitals see motion pictures gratis weekly.

The reports from the various Film Boards show that the distributors located in the following exchange centers furnished films gratis to the corresponding number of institutions: Albany, 16; Atlanta, 17; Boston, 22; Buffalo, 21; Butte, 3; Charlotte, 9; Chicago, 116; Cincinnati, 8; Cleveland, 69; Dallas, 6; Denver, 23; Des Moines, 5; Detroit, 18; Indianapolis, 21; Kansas City, 20; Los Angeles, 20; Milwaukee, 24; Minneapolis, none; Memphis, 6; New Haven, 10; New Orleans, 11; New York, 38; Oklahoma City, 7; Omaha, 31; Philadelphia, 41; Pittsburgh, 19; Portland, 4; St. Louis, 42; Salt Lake City, 17; San Francisco, 45; Seattle, 11; Washington, 9.

The summary of the report of the operations of the Boards of Arbitration, operating through the local exhibitor organizations and Film Board of Trade, discloses the amicable settlement of a great number of disputes without recourse to expensive lawsuits. There were 15,451 controversies between exhibitors and distributors—controversies involving $4,269,752.06.

Of these disputes there were 14,655 claims totaling $3,963,004.82 made by distributors; and 796 claims totaling $306,749.24 by exhibitors. Fourteen thousand, three hundred and fifty-six controversies involving $3,825,636.76 were disposed of as follows: 4671 claims totaling $1,254,273.04 were settled before submission to arbitration; 2,368 claims involving $671,920.32 were withdrawn after submission to arbitration; 6,593 claims involving $2,047,723.16 were considered by the Boards of Arbitration, of which number 426, involving $150,331.35 were dismissed. Of this number of claims but 36, involving $20,753.71, required a seventh arbitrator. There were 425 claims, involving 129,384.23, awarded against distributors; while the awards against exhibitors were 6,017, involving $1,591,037.73. There were five claims involving $878.72 litigated before submission to arbitration. There were 62, involving $48,344.55, requiring a court proceeding after submission, of which number but nine, involving $1,345.34, were court proceedings to enforce compliance with the awards made, and for the entry of judgments. At the end of the year, 1927, there were pending 1,095 claims, involving $444,115.30 undisposed of.

In the four years that arbitration has been conducted in the industry there have been 50,006 controversies disposed of, totaling $11,230,298.94.

River Rouge, Mich., House Razed by Flames

A fire of undetermined origin destroyed the Fleur de Lys Theatre, West Jefferson and Maple Avenues, River Rouge, outside of Detroit, causing more than $100,000 damage last week. Although John Motoc and Andrew Bzovl, joint owners of the building, blamed defective wire as the cause, an investigation is being conducted by Fire Chief Bodary. An appeal was sent to the Detroit Fire Department when it seemed the flames were beyond control of the River Rouge department. Engine and ladder companies from Detroit responded and only the walls of the theatre were left standing when the blaze had been extinguished.

May Use "Talkies" to Teach Army

The War Department in Washington, D. C., has authorized the use of talking moving pictures in a tryout at the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga., to determine if simultaneous projection of sound and motion can be used advantageously in training activities in the army.

During the late war the government used advantageously many films taken for training purposes. But a considerable portion of them were devoted to titles and, at times, it was found necessary to have an auditor supplement the titles during the projection of a film. Thus the authorities look with favor on a device that will record both sound and motion simultaneously.

Aladdin Amusement Co. Adds to Denver Chain

The Aladdin Amusement Company, which owns a Denver chain of amusement houses, has added the America Theatre, a Universal house since 1923, to its circuit. The transaction was completed last week between Mike Newman, representing Universal, and Harry E. Huffman, in behalf of the Aladdin interests, who are to take possession of the house on April 6, 1928. The new owners plan to install Vitaphone and Movietone equipment in the America and give the same entertainment as appears at the new Aladdin Theatre. Gerald Whitney has been appointed manager of the America.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

ANOTHER A. M. P. A. dinner and dance is over, and a good one; in fact, by far the best the organization has conducted. This was the unanimous opinion of the capacity gathering that attended. To Bruce Gallup, president of the A. M. P. A., and the members of the various committees that handled the arrangements congratulations are due.

This party was a more intimate one than any held in the past. Everyone was there on the same basis. It had been promised there would be no speeches and there were none. The dignitaries had no more chance to shine than the most humble employee of the smallest company. The stars were not spotted. They were lost in the continuous round of gaiety.

IT was SOME party, though, as usual, it was late in getting started. But nobody seemed to mind that a bit. There was amusement in the penny arcade that was established in the lobby of the Astor. There were harmonicas at the tables by which the guests made their own entertainment. It was just one continuous round of joy from the 7:30 starting time announced until—well, most any old time.

Once the dinner got under way everything was most informal. Those wordy speeches of the past that could rarely be heard above the din, proved a happy elimination, for the gaps created by their absence were nicely filled in and far more entertaining.

Bruce Gallup, as Master of Ceremonies, was at his happy best. With a witty quip and a wise-crack injected here and there he kept things moving at a lively pace.

And the A. M. P. A. newsreel was, as usual, among the decided hits of the evening, for which credit is due Vic Shapiro and Warren Nolan, who arranged it. It put the assembled guests in a happy frame of mind with its witty sallies on those well known in the industry. It fairy sparkled with fun and its humor was added to by some bright remarks from the assembled guests.

An unique form of entertainment was provided for the first time through a radio stunt in which many humorous messages were purported to have been received out of the air from absentees and others and read to the amusement of the diners. It was as well received as any of the entertainment provided during the evening.

Between the newsreel, the radio and the announcements made by Bruce Gallup, special numbers were run on the small stage. Everything was snappy and jazzy, with a splendid orchestra dispensing music for those who cared to dance, and it seemed that everyone did care to dance, for the floor was so crowded there was scarcely moving space.

Out in the arcade, at the Astor, were installed a number of machines into which one was permitted to peep for a penny a peep, and there they saw scenes from the most popular productions of the season. That these peep machines were well patronized may be judged from the fact that they accumulated a total of 2,500 pennies. The machines were provided by the International Mutascope Reel Company.

We repeat, it was SOME party.

THE telephoto is now a reality. Transmission of motion pictures was accomplished by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company when on Wednesday at the Embassy Theatre in New York at 6:30 in the evening movies were shown of Vilma Banky that were taken in Chicago on her arrival there at 10:30 in the morning.

In the test that was shown at the Embassy Wednesday Miss Banky stepped from the Twentieth Century Limited at Chicago and smiled her best smile into the camera. These smiles and incidental motions were reproduced slowly on another exposed film in the offices of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company at 15 Dey Street in New York at 1 o'clock. By 3:30 enough film had been transmitted to set into a projection machine.

The finished product was flashed on the Embassy screen at 7 o'clock in the evening under the direction of the United Artists Corporation.

"They say that the directors have temperament and they can't do much with them. I believe that, but all artists have temperament and the directors are certainly as much artists as their stars are. Perhaps if they used a little more diplomacy with them, they would get much farther. I believe that the actors are getting too much for their ability. They certainly would not get those fabulous salaries on the speaking stage.

"This seems to be a rather pessimistic letter, but one becomes this way after working one's fool head off trying to put over the junk they are releasing."

These straightforward remarks from an exhibitor who is in actual contact with the public are commended to the attention of the production people.

To Mr. Bryer's list of suggestions we would add this: if the energy that is burned up on studio politics were devoted to honest, sincere effort to make real pictures, the result would amaze everybody.

A ROMANTIC SETTING FOR SCREEN ROMANCE—THE INDIANA

Indianapolis Cinema Retains Its Place Among Country's Most Colorful Playhouses

SINCE its opening last June, the Indiana theatre, Indianapolis, has figured as a leading factor in the amusement life of that city, and by reason of its handsome design and excellent equipment for the comfort of patrons, as well as the most modern methods of stage and screen presentations, it has enjoyed rank among the first flight theatres of the country.

Reproductions of photos showing the interior beauties of the Indiana on this and an adjoining page reveal the beauty and luxury which this fine structure affords the theatregoers of Indianapolis.

The exterior, executed in white terra cotta, presents a façade of unusual appeal and prepares the patron for the striking effects to be found within. On entering the outer lobbies, the Spanish effects, and as one enters the main corridor the luxuries and beauties of the interior manifest themselves.

On the right—View of the lobby showing the grand staircase, executed in marble, and the painting of the Taj Mahal by Randolph LaSalle Coats, Hoosier artist.

On the right is a grand staircase, a marble ascent.

Off the grand corridor six aisles lead in the main auditorium. The balcony sweeps up from about mid-way of the theatre.

And now we enter the auditorium. A vast proscenium arch greets the eyes. Surrounding it are masterpieces in sculpture. The effect is illuminated from the rear by various lights, and woven into it are figures of men, animals and reptiles.

The exits are so arranged that, although 3,500 people can be seated in the building, it can be emptied in a few minutes.

The Indiana was designed by Rubush & Hunter.

Shown above is the main lounge of the Indiana, conforming in its design to the Spanish architecture which strikes the keynote of the theatre's exterior and interior plan. Rough stuccoed walls are broken by recesses and niches. The furnishings and floor coverings feature harmonious colorings and designs.

Theatre Building Business Map

Including Analysis of Key City Attendance Averages

		Very light new construction
Above Average Business	AA	Light new construction
Average Business	A	Moderately heavy construction
Under Average Business	UA	Heavy new construction

The map of the United States shown here is divided into seven territories, with colored shading indicating the division of new proposed theatre building as represented for the period from February 15th to March 15th. This new construction is represented in valuation of dollars and cents rather than number of projects.

The shading is in four densities; solid, which represents the greatest value of proposed theatres; heavy stipple, which is second in valuation of new construction; medium, which areas represent conservative building; and the very light areas, where the investment in new theatre projects is very light. The information used in compiling the statistics visualized by the map was obtained through several reliable sources, and the map is to be considered as very nearly accurate in representing comparative theatre building activities in various sections of the country.

The circles shown on the map are located in key cities and illustrate averages of theatre attendance during the three months' period from February 15th to March 15th. The diagrams indicate the relative attendance at the better theatres in these cities during the period covered. These are given by "averages," with symbols to indicate "Above Average" and "Under Average" box office returns. The term "average" as applied in this survey indicates satisfactory box office returns, based upon theatre expectancies, which, in turn, are governed by past earnings under similar or nearly similar conditions.

These attendance statistics were compiled from an analysis of the Key City Reports, published weekly in Motion Picture News, and other sources of information gathered by this publication.

OUR report for new theatre projects announced for the last thirty days—February 15th to March 15th—shows a decrease over the report of the preceding thirty days, particularly in the amount of investment required for the projects and the total seating capacity.

The number of new theatres projected is practically the same. The figures for this latest report are $20,638,000, to be invested in fifty-five new projects which will total a seating capacity of 76,350.

Four of these new theatres will cost over one million dollars, while nine of them will come within the range of five hundred thousand and one million.

The averages for the whole country are as follows: $375,250 per theatre with a seating capacity of 1,390 and a cost per seat of $270.

The Middle States show by far the heaviest proposed construction of any division of the country with a total of $12,003,000, for twenty-five new projects covering the cost of 32,350 seats.

In this territory, three houses will require for their construction over one million dollars and six houses will require between five hundred thousand and a million. The average cost of each theatre is $480,120, with 1,294 seats, giving the average cost per seat of $372.

Second in line is the West Coast territory where six new theatres will cost $4,550,000 and seat 16,000. The average cost per theatre in this territory is the highest for the country, as $758,333 will be spent for theatres seating 2,667, showing an average cost per seat of $284.

The North Atlantic States, which have been running first in most of our recent reports, have for their schedule twelve new theatres to cost $2,925,000, with an accurate seating capacity of 14,200. These figures give the average cost per theatre of $243,750 with an average seating capacity of 1,183 and cost per seat, $206.

The building in New England is confined to Massachusetts, where three new theatres were projected, calling for $490,000 investment and 4,400 seats. This makes the average for the three theatres $163,335 with 1,467 seats and an average cost per seat $112.

THE two remaining territories, Southeastern and Western, show announcements for a very light building.

In the Southeastern territory, the total cost of two new theatres will be $100,000 with a seating capacity of 2,100; while in the Western territory, two theatres will cost $175,000 and have a seating capacity of 1,800.

One of the most important announcements included in this report is the building program of the Fischer-Paramount Theatre Corp., which will construct five new theatres in Wisconsin. These theatres are to be high class.

Wisconsin is also scheduled for three other theatres giving a total of eight for this thirty-day report. This state shows the greatest number of new theatres but not the largest investment. The theatres in Wisconsin will cost $3,445,000 and seat 11,500.

Missouri, with five new theatres, leads in total cost where 7,750 seats will require an investment of $4,725,000.

California, where there has only been light building recently, is second in the amount of investment required by states. Here five theatres will cost $4,250,000 and will have a seating capacity of 13,000.

Indiana ranks fourth with two new theatres, totaling $1,550-000 and seating 2,800.

Pennsylvania in fitfh, scheduled for five theatres, costing a total of $1,450,000 and seating 6,100.

Illinois shows four new theatres costing a total of $1,385,000 and seating 5,200.

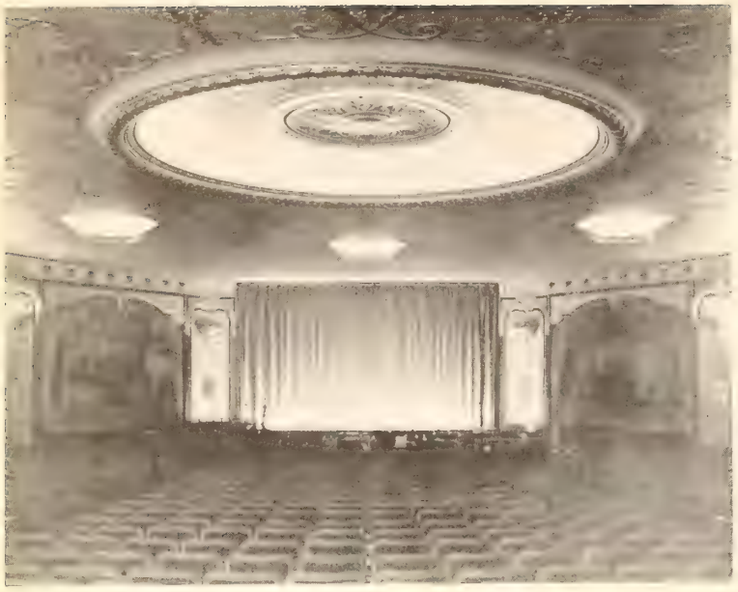
While it was noted previously in this article that this thirty-day report shows a decrease in the total amount of investment required for the new theatres over that of the preceding report, it, nevertheless, is true, for if the building as indicated in this report continues at this present rate, our total number of theatres and investment will be in excess of that required for the year 1927.

The sale of equipment has been retarded during the last thirty days. This slowing up may be explained to some extent through the seasonal decrease of demand. However, the outlooks for the sale of equipment this spring are good, and many of the manufacturers are laying plns for heavy production.

THOUGH current conversation is to the effect that business generally is "off," and in many lines the evidence supports the contention, we fail to find anything indicative of a slump in theatre attendance for the period covered by this report. It is true that theatre business is rather below than at normal over this period, but it must be remembered that the Lenten season is with us and that income taxes had to be paid on or before March 15, the date on which we closed the books of check-up for this report.

Using the comparative basis as a means of figuring this month's map with that of last month, the changes certainly show no startling slowing off at the box offices in the key cities. In all there are four changes downward: Minneapolis from an Above Average to Average; Detroit from Average to Under Average; Birmingham from Average to Under Average, and Baltimore from Average to Under Average. Upward changes on the current map over last month's are Salt Lake City from Average to Above Average; Boston from Average to Above Average, and Cleveland from Under Average to Average. The balance of the cities are static, remaining at the same level of business as last month.

In all of those cities whence have issued reports of poor business during the period under consideration, the local viewpoint inclines more to attributing the cause to a lessening of interest due to weak attractions than to bad business conditions. As a matter of fact the only houses which as such seem to be having hard times are some of the neighborhood theatres in certain cities where the competition from the de luxe houses is especially keen. But for the rest the bigger theatres appear to be doing a pretty fair business in the face of seasonal factors militating against theatregoing during this period of the year. It is worth noting that in the cities where business has been steadily under average over this period, an occasional strong attraction of particular allure to the public has succeeded in running up very substantial returns.



The much publicized unemployment situation apparently is not affecting attendance averages—and then after balancing the "statistics" of the "Yeas" against the "noes" in this unemployment debate, one is left wondering if it is or it isn't, if you know what we mean. There is the estimate of Senator Wagner of New York that 4,000,000 persons are out of work throughout the country, as against Secretary James J. Davis reporting that throughout the country on Jan. 1, 1928, there were 1,874,000 persons unemployed. A more recent report on the situation was issued by the National Association of Manufacturers, based on a survey up to March 21, the results of which showed a slight increase in employment was reported by 1,078 members of the Association. The members reporting employ about one-fourth of the 3,000,000 workers employed by the total membership of the association. This report, issued this week, shows an increase in employment this year over this time last year, the increase being 1.24 per cent. The companies are employing an aggregate of 663,180 workers as against 655,015 at the same time last year. The same companies, if operated at capacity, would employ 757,153 workers, so that today they are operating at 87.5 per cent of capacity, an increase of 6.5 per cent over last year. So, there you are.

THE facts in the theatre attendance situation at present are that business is not all that all the theatre operators would wish for. The trade is "choosey" and it takes a show of some real drawing power to bring receipts up to what is required for the payment of overhead and a fair margin of profits. But the situation the country over is not anything to become discouraged about, even though there are indications that the Hollywood plants must increase their pace and step-up the standard of their product or find that showmanship at the point of contact with the public will take even greater strides toward a blended type of show which will become increasingly heavy on the stage end of the bill.

The public is showing signs of seeking newer novelties than the screen seems able to provide in steady supply. From the action of the New York Stock Exchange, with its 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 share days, it would appear as though the ticker tape is supplying some of the thrills that formerly were sought mainly at the picture shows.

New theatre openings in two key cities had an important bearing on general theatre business in those towns during this period. In Pittsburgh the new Stanley entered the lists, and with the interest created by a house of large capacity and the most modern attributes of sumptuousness and equipment to stir up the curiosity of the local public, the Stanley commanded such a large outturning that other houses suffered. Then Penn, also a new house, did not feel the effects of the big draw at the Stanley, but the neighborhoods suffered. The other big opening was in Seattle, where a new Publix theatre now caters to the amusement seeking public with a de luxe bill of pictures and presentations.

The pictures which took the lead during the month we are covering in this report are a combination of "name" attractions and straight offerings in which story and title take precedence over any of the personalities appearing in them. The ten leading key city attractions during the month were: "The Jazz Singer," "The Circus," "Red Hair," "The Gaucho," "Sadie Thompson," "The Legion of the Condemned," "The Last Command," "The Patent Leather Kid," "The Enemy," and "Wild Geese." Other outstanding features which figured importantly in good weeks at the bigger houses are "The Student Prince," "Chicago," "Sorrell and Son," "The Girl from Chicago" and "The Noose."

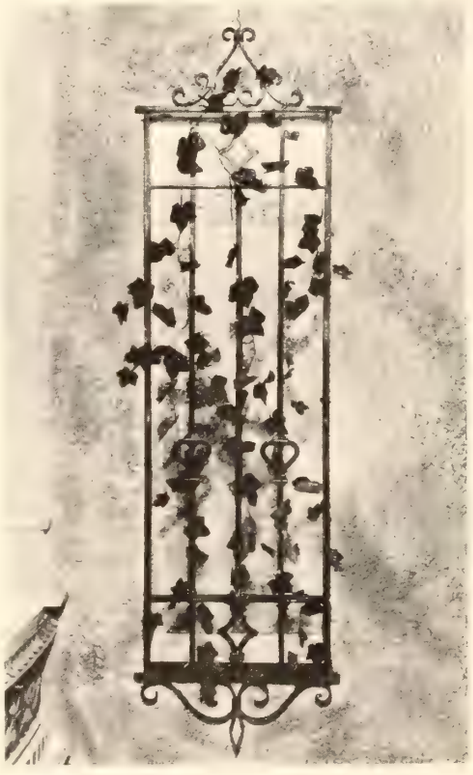
Light Auditoriums During as Well as Between Shows

By A. RODGERS
Edison Lamp Works of G. E. Co.

DURING the infancy of the motion picture theatre and even until a few years ago in the modern show houses, the auditorium lighting was given consideration merely as a means of providing sufficient illumination before and after performances to enable the patrons to become seated or depart. With this practice, those entering the theatre while the show was in progress found themselves seemingly plunged into total darkness and were forced to make their way; groping and stumbling to their seats as best they might.

The modern policy of courtesy, service and comfort for the patrons, of course, frowns upon such conditions, and we find that present dictates are that two distinct forms of illumination are required in every auditorium; namely, a relatively high level of lighting before and after performances and at intermissions, and a soft, dim light throughout the presentation. Te general illumination in the intermission enables the easy reading of programs, minimizes the confusion of seating newcomers, and helps, as it were, to speed the departing guest.



The dim glow during the performance assists the ushers in making seating arrangements, makes possible ready reference to the programs, and does away with the disagreeable, uneasy sensation often experienced when sitting in nearly total darkness.

To prevent a sudden harsh transition when changing from one form of lighting to the other, dimming control equipment is necessary. The soft modulated changes obtainable with a well-designed system adds considerable finesse to the manner of presentation and have a desirable reaction in their quieting effect upon the audience. Before taking up the pros and cons of various forms of lighting practice, there are certain fundamental principles of good auditorium illumination which must be noted.

First: The lighting must be comfortable. That is, there should be nothing about the lighting system which may prove annoying or distracting to the patrons—a glaring light source harsh shadows—a stray ray of brightness from a decorative unit or reflected glare from a polished surface.

Second: The illumination must be well distributed. The ceiling and walls as well as the seating area must, of course, receive proper lighting. If the distribution is too uneven, the spotty effects produced will detract materially from the appearance of the interior.

Third: The lighting arrangement should be such that thorough maintenance is possible. It is most essential that the system be so designed that the lighting equipment is readily and easily accessible. Burned out lamps and lamps which have outlived their rated life and thus become blackened, should immediately be replaced, as they make the lighting appear spotty and unkept. The units should be cleaned periodically, as even a small accumulation of dust and dirt causes an appreciable loss of effective illumination. Poor maintenance creates an impression of carelessness and negligence on the part of the management.

The delicate touch of light from this trellised window recess adds a note of decoration to an otherwise uninteresting wall surface.

The methods in use for procuring general illumination in the auditorium vary widely with the architecture of the interior, the class of patronage, and the individuality and ingenuity of those responsible for the design and use of equipment. We may, however, form two general classifications of modern practice—direct lighting and indirect lighting. Of the two, direct lighting is the more efficient, while indirect lighting is the more comfortable and often the more pleasing.

With the direct system, the amount of light necessary to illuminate the whole room must be concentrated in several light sources which are comparatively small with relation to the interior. If these units are too small with regard to the quantity of light emitted, they will appear excessively bright and unpleasant. It is, therefore, plain that when a small number of fixtures are to be used, high wattage must be provided in each and the unit must be as large as possible. If small units are to be employed, low wattage lamps must be used in them and a large number provided.

IT may prove interesting to note the various types of direct lighting systems and some of their characteristics as follows:

Pendant Enclosing Units of Translucent Glass, Parchment, or Fabric.—This usually proves the most inexpensive system to install and the easiest to maintain, but it is considered by some to present a less pleasing appearance than other arrangements, due to the necessarily large number of units suspended from the ceiling.

Decorated Diffusing Glass Panels or Skylights Set in the Ceiling.—If only a few of these are to be used, they must be of large area, for if the surface brightness of the panels is too great, their decorative effect is destroyed. As this type of lighting does not throw any illumination on the remainder of the ceiling, the contrast between this dim area and the bright panels is generally unpleasant.

Large Chandeliers.—These are very

Utility—the Convenience to Patrons Entering and Leaving During a Performance—and Beauty-Enhancement of Decorative Effects—are Served by Proper Lighting

In the auditorium of the Capitol theatre, Richmond, Va., cove lighting in 3 different colors provides the general illumination. The artistic lighting of the statuettes in wall niches and the small lanterns at the rear furnishes the necessary illumination during performances.

decorative and prove most desirable with certain forms of architecture. In connection with them, however, it should be borne in mind that the chandelier was designed originally for use with the candle—a light source of low brilliance. When we attempt to employ a more concentrated and powerful light source, the modern incandescent lamp—in place of these candles, its great brightness results in concealing the beauty of fine workmanship involved, rather than enhancing the appearance of the fixture.

Wall Brackets.—It is not good practice to use these for general lighting, as they are always in the field of view and the necessary amount of wattage makes them appear too bright. They must, of course, always be provided with shades or shields.

WITH indirect lighting systems, the ceiling and some times the upper part of the side walls, becomes the source of illumination. As the light is distributed over these large areas by hidden lamps, there are no unpleasant brightness contrasts, annoying glare and overbrilliant units. For this reason, indirect lighting appears comfortable and unobtrusive, with an attendant atmosphere of dignity and calm.

There are various ways in which this form of illumination may be applied to obtain the most novel and artistic results. These may be enumerated as follows:

Pendant Indirect Units.—It is desirable for these to have illuminated glass panels incorporated in their design, or to be of the luminous bowl or semi-indirect type, in order that they may not appear as dark spots against a well-lighted ceiling. Very pleasing results may often be obtained by employing an indirect lighting unit inside of a crystal chandelier. An excellent idea, also, is to throw light against the outside of these chandeliers by means of spotlights concealed about the auditorium. This causes the crystals to sparkle and gleam, and at the same time does away with the direct glare experienced when bare lamps are employed in the fixtures.

Coves and Wall Boxes.—These are especially effective, as no lighting fixtures are apparent, and there are no suspended units to break up the sweeping lines of the ceiling. If cove lighting is to be used, the auditorium should be designed with this end in view, for the coves must be built as an integral part of the interior decoration. If the building is so large that this lighting cannot spread across the entire ceiling, it may be supplemented by indirect lighting from central fixtures, or a second or even third set of coves may be constructed in the center to form large shallow domes. Unique color effects can be accomplished with the latter method by employing different colors in the separate sets of coves.

Floodlights.—In cases of large auditoriums, especially where parts of ceilings and side walls are to be ornamented in bas-relief, cove lighting is often impractical. This form of interior may best be lighted by floodlighting projectors concealed along the edge of balconies, in high, ornamental windows or arches, and at various other strategic points. These projectors must be carefully hidden and so arranged as to light the walls or ceiling at the opposite side of the room in order to obtain a good spread of light and natural shadows.

Under low balconies, a rather flat type of indirect unit suspended only a short distance from the ceiling generally provides the most pleasing light, although recessed direct lighting equipment and hemispherical globes mounted flush with the ceiling may usually be effectively employed. In some cases a cove under the rear of the balcony has found successful application.

To provide a low level of illumination during the performance, a separate lighting system must be brought into play. This may be a separate circuit of low wattage lamps embodied in the main lighting fixtures or coves, or it may consist of a number of small decorative units, wall brackets, lighted windows, illuminated or statues, adding a touch of decoration and providing the desired low intensity of light.

A point to be remembered is that the ordinary, small decorative lighting units, as lanterns, stars, colored globes, and wall bracket shades and shields, are intended for use with low wattage lamps. It is not at all uncommon to find these equipped with large lamps and depended upon for general illumination. The nature of these fixtures usually makes them unsuitable for general lighting, and as the high brightness of the large lamps destroy their decorative effect, this practice is doubly undesirable.

The modern trend of the motion picture theatre is towards the picturesque and distinctive interior. The motif of the auditorium designs range from the grand and formal, through the unique, exotic, and unusual, to the cozy and intimate, and are intended to serve as a setting which will enhance the pleasure of theatre going. As the jewel is enriched by a handsome setting, so is the charm of the motion picture increased by pleasant surroundings. The artistry and appeal of the auditorium decoration forms a background to the picture in the minds of the audience in much the same manner as does the music of the orchestra. It is therefore evident that the lighting of this type of distinctive interior must be care-

Showmanship Strikes Out for Novelty in the New "Fantom Screen"

"Presentation" on the Screen Gives Picture New Grip on Public's Interest

THOUGH in principle it is not entirely new, the Fantom Screen revealed to the public for the first time at the premiere of "The Trail of '98" at the Astor theatre, New York, created no little stir and was provocative of widespread interest on the part of the trade as well as the public. The Fantom Screen, which permits of enlargement of the projected image to twice its normal size, is credited by those who have seen "The Trail of '98" with contributing importantly to the extraordinarily thrilling effect of the snowslide which registers as one of the highlights of this melodrama of the gold rush in Alaska.

Probably the employment of the effect stands as one of the most ingenious strokes of pure showmanship that has developed recently in the field of the motion picture. Regarding the manner in which it may be handled by the company whose specialists developed it, there is a possibility that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the Loew Theatres may have it patented and copyrighted.

This method of presenting enlarged pictures of certain sequences suited for such treatment, is basically the same idea that was employed years ago (rather unsuccessfully owing to limited light sources) in showings of "The Great Train Robbery," and later was experimented with by D. W. Griffith in connection with his spectacular production "Intolerance." Its first successful employment was with the showing of "Old Ironsides" at the Rivoli theatre in New York last season. The device used for "Old Ironsides" is called the "Magnoscope." Both this and the Fantom Screen have wide-angle projection as the basis of the effect. A projector equipped with a wide-angle lense is used to project those portions of the film to be presented in the enlarged form.

The Fantom Screen represents an elaboration of the Magnoscope. In the case of the latter the large screen is masked down to the normal size with curtains which draw from the sides and at the top to expose the full screen surface, which at the Rivoli theatre extended clear across the stage. The screen, however, remains stationary.

The Fantom Screen is mobile, and as the picture enlarges it moves forward to the curtain line. This action, simultaneous with the enlarging of the picture gives a double effect of growing size and proximity and is startling in the reaction upon the spectator.

Joseph R. Vogel of the Loew theatre department is credited with the original idea sought by J. J. McCarthy, well known road show man who is handling "The Trail of 98," and it was developed by A. S. Howard, Frank Norton and Lester Isaacs of the Loew technical staff and Peter Clark, designer and manufacturer of stage equipment.

The screen travels a distance of 16 feet as it is used at the Astor theatre. The change-over from the normal sized screen (which is 16 feet) to the enlarged surface is accomplished without any halt in the continuity of the show. The desire to produce the enlarged effect without a break in the action on the screen is responsible for the device worked out by Mr. Vogel and the Loew technical men.

The screen used for the entire show is set back at about number 3 position on the stage. It is tracked top and bottom and masked down to the 16 foot size by curtains which draw and lift. As the curtains part and the screen moves forward the picture is irised out to fill the portion revealed. This is accomplished by a nice timing of the change-over from the regular projector to a wide-angle projector. The size of the picture is simultaneously increased to exactly cut up to the mask as it is drawn to reveal the full screen and as the screen moves up closer to the curtain line. At the conclusion of that portion of film to be exhibited in magnified form, the order is reversed, so the screen gradually recedes and the picture grows smaller, finally disolving into the picture projected from the machine with the standard lens.

The snowslide scene which Clarence Brown produced as a dramatic episode of his picture is said to be greatly enhanced in spectacular value by the enlarged screen. Certainly its effect as projected at the Astor theatre is one to be ranked among the big moments achieved in motion pictures. Those who have seen the picture projected with and without the Fantom Screen insist that the magnification, especially as it is accomplished by the mobile screen, represents a remarkably improved vehicle for carrying over the dramatic effect sought by the producer when he evolved the scene.

ITS importance from a showmanship angle is well attested by the stir caused in the theatre when the effect is used. J. J. McCarthy in discussing the Fantom Screen with a representative of this publication said that the use of a similar device in connection with "Intolerance" would have given that picture a two year run on Broadway, and that even greater popular success would have resulted for the road show presentations of "Ben Hur" had the Fantom Screen been used for the race scenes.

The idea of using the enlarged screen for the snowslide sequence in "The Trail of 98" was proposed by Irving Thalberg, M-G-M production executive when he arranged for the road show presentation of the Clarence Brown production.

Mr. McCarthy, who was engaged to handle the picture as a road show, wanted to find some means for introducing the effect without stopping the action of the picture, a feature he considered most important. He communicated his notion to Joe Vogel and the Loew technical men and out of various suggestions there suddenly came Vogel's proposal that the ideal method would be to move the screen out toward the spectators as the picture enlarged.

There were various obstacles to be overcome in producing the effect, but the technicians found the way. For one thing the intense heat caused by the concentration of light on the small lens offered a serious problem, and the means of bringing up the picture simultaneously with the opening of the curtains and forward movement of the screen was another. The mechanical devices especially built to accomplish the result are, naturally, being kept secret by the men who developed them because of the possibility that the company may restrict the screen to itself by copyright and patent.

Call Service for Doctors Featured by Manager

MANAGER Raymond B. Jones of the Worth theatre in Fort Worth, Tex., has improved the "call service" for doctors who attend performances, and by means of a circular letter to all medical men and nurses there and in neighboring towns made a special bid for their patronage.

The circular letter in which Jones called to the attention of doctors and nurses his special service, explained the careful attention which is given to this feature of the Worth's service.

In carrying out the system in a manner to insure rapid delivery of any messages phoned to the theatre for doctors and nurses, Jones has prepared small blanks in pad form which are supplied to each usher. These provide space for the name of the doctor or nurse and designations of the seats which they occupy in the theatre. The seat designations are indicated in a printed box at the bottom of the blank. Each of the four aisles of the theatre are indicated by numbers with spaces for the number of the row and seat under the aisle number. Thus the usher without difficulty can record the exact location of the doctor or nurse and turns the blank in to the office, where the phone calls are received and from which the person called can be located immediately.

Merchandising Amusement

BY WILLIAM H. McLAUGHLIN

Treasurer Stoneham Theatre Co.

THE size of the city or town in which the theatre is located has a great deal to do with the manner in which the exhibitor can sell his merchandise to the public. In cities and towns from 5,000 to 25,000, the proposition is different than in key and big cities.

In the small towns and cities the theatre must be considered a community house, as a large percentage of the patrons and prospective patrons live within a radius of but a few miles from the theatre. A community patronage is the hardest in the business to cater to. Mrs. Black meets Mrs. White in the baker shop, telephones to her, or sees her over the back-yard fence to tell her what is lacking at the theatre whether the manager is trying to give them a good show or not. The point is, what you give the public, the service and merchandise in a community house is analyzed and talked over by every one in the community as they are in direct touch with one another.

In the key cities it is different. The patronage is entirely transient, the patrons on leaving, dispersing to towns and cities within a radius of forty miles, never seeing one another to talk over the shortcomings of service or pictures. Catering to a transient trade, they have a large percentage of new customers coming and going, whereas the community theatre must retain and bring back again the same customers, as the community comprises its biggest field from which it must draw its patronage.

It is from the angle of the community theatre owners that I give these ideas of selling amusement to the public, as I know nothing of the big city proposition.

My greatest business building has been brought about by writing editorials for the two weekly newspapers. I have educated the public into various phases of this business that they knew nothing about. They have always had the impression that the manager could buy all the best pictures and let the poor ones go. In fact, they believed the responsibility of a poor picture was up to the exhibitor. By explaining the way in which I had to buy pictures and play them, they readily grasp the point and I do not get all the criticisms if I happen to run a poor one.

Give them a concrete example and it drives home a fact more readily. The sporting element to a great extent patronizes the theatre. Take the example of the ball player batting for 1,000. Human hands and minds are making pictures; therefore every picture is not a hit, but the average of hits is a larger percentage than any ball player attains.

Next, enter the community life of your town. If offered the presidency of any of the service organizations such as Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, etc., or of civic organizations, accept them. It gives you a standing in the community. Do not seek or accept public office. Personally, I have refused to run for public office, because as the head of community organizations you can advocate things for the benefit of the community, but do not have to make decisions on them. In public office you must make decisions on permits, bids, and a great many other things and some one is always on the outside, and there is always opposition, no matter how fair the decision. You cannot afford to displease any one as every person in your town is a prospective customer, and those that don't get what they are after, resent it.

"I have educated my public into various phases of this business. By explaining the way in which I had to buy pictures and play them, they readily grasped the point and I do not get all the criticisms now if I happen to run a poor feature," says Mr. McLaughlin in this remarkably illuminating article on the merchandising of amusement at community theatres.

OFTEN a catastrophe in this industry can be turned into an asset to you. The Montreal theatre fire I used to increase my child's patronage fifty per cent. In a newspaper editorial, I told how I had never opened the balcony of my theatre to children under sixteen. I considered the theatre the same as a school house. The primary grades are always put on the lower floor of a school house and the higher grades on the second floor. This is a measure of safety, so from the time I took over the house, I never allowed small children in the balcony. The point was driven home to the parents that I was taking good care of the children's patronage, so children who had never been to the theatre before began to come.

I consider the children of a community the best advertising bet there is in this industry. If you are respected and liked by the children, they will give you more and better advertising to their parents and the grown-ups than money can buy. On special pictures that have an appeal in them for children, I always hold the matinee on the first day's showing until after school. I most always get a very good house; and as it does not take as much to please a child as it does a grown-up, they are most always a great advertising medium. They arrive home at just supper time, they are all wrought up and enthused over the picture, that enthusiasm is dispersed around the supper table, with the result that some of the grown-ups get it and put on their hat and coat after supper and go to see what it is all about. It is an assured thing with me, if I sell out at the matinee, I sell out at night.

I START back further than this whenever I have a special picture coming during the week, the Saturday previous I take a few minutes, go on the stage and tell the children that there will be a special matinee, and tell them something about the picture. Certainly, I use the screen to sell my pictures, but that has a cold background to sell pictures to children. Some might be too young to read, others are not interested in advertising, but when I give them the personal touch by appearing before them, they absorb what I say and remember it, besides telling the folks about it. To keep in personal touch with the children, one Saturday a month I give them a talk from the stage, telling them what to do in case of fire or panic, pointing out to them the various exit, and, telling them not to run for the door they come in, but to pick out the nearest exit to the seat in which they are sitting. This talk is brought home to the parents with the result that I keep my theatre full on Saturday afternoons. Once in awhile I go before the grown-ups when I have anything important such as change of policy, etc., but not often as familiarity breeds contempt.

I have always made it a practice to hold all the benefit performance possible at my theatre, even if I have to stretch a point to get them. It means people coming into your theatre that never attend a regular show and there is always the possibility of them getting the habit.

I have always been very strict in the matter of noise and disturbances by young people in the theatre. It is true of young folks that if you give them an inch they will take a mile. My reason for being strict on this, is that no matter how much you get after the young people, they will come back to your theatre again as they haven't the means of going out of town. If your adult patronage is annoyed or

The Granada, a beautiful Cleveland Neighborhood Theater, operated by Loew's Ohio Theaters, Inc., where Manufactured Weather provides the same Healthful Comfort enjoyed by the Patrons of Loew's "downtown" houses—The State, The Allen and The Stillman.*

CAN THE NEIGHBORHOOD HOUSE AFFORD MANUFACTURED WEATHER?*

Good showmen, alert to perceive opportunities, realize that the most vital element to be considered today in connection with the comfort of patrons is air conditioning in the theater. This has become increasingly important, too, because the public has learned to recognize immediately the health-giving comfort of Carrier Conditioned Theaters. Showmen are realizing, also, that people prefer to go a much greater distance to a properly air conditioned house rather than patronize their neighborhood theater where the same pictures are shown, but where the important element of Manufactured Weather* is lacking.

Theater owners, architects and Carrier engineers have foreseen this. The result has been a concerted and very successful effort to devise and standardize equipment which shall be within the economic reach of, and a profitable investment for, the fine small theater and the neighborhood house of 900 or more seats.

Here are a few examples of the profitable application of Manufactured Weather* in smaller theaters and neighborhood houses: The Texan in Houston, owned by Will Horowitz, a 1500-seat house operating at a 25c top, has been Carrier Conditioned since 1925. It paid, because the same system was extended to include the Iris, a 1200-seat house also owned by Horowitz. The B. S. Moss Theaters Corporation has seven Carrier Conditioned Neighborhood Houses spotted over Manhattan, Brooklyn and Long Island. The Franklin, a Publix house at Tampa, and the Gumbiner in Los Angeles, are two 900-seat houses which greeted the past season with Manufactured Weather.* There are others, including the Grand, operated by Biggio Bros. at Steubenville, Ohio; The Eastern and Clinton at Columbus, operated by James Enterprises, and a group of Loew's Ohio Theaters, of which The Granada, shown above, is one.

These theaters were Carrier Conditioned after a most careful economic survey on the part of the owners and their architects, men who have learned that Carrier Equipment and Engineering produce results, and that comfort of patrons is an asset.

For Operators of Theater Chains, Owners of Individual Theaters, and Theater Architects, there are these interesting books: (1) The most recent issue of The Weather Vein, "Your Own Neighborhood Theater;" (2) "Air Conditioning as Applied in Theaters and Film Laboratories," an impartial survey of facts reprinted from The Transactions of The Society of Motion Picture Engineers;" (3) The Book, "Theater Cooling and Conditioning." Induction Motor-Generator Sets for Projection Work

THE General Electric Company announces a line of constant-potential, multiple-arc, induction motor-generator sets designed especially for motion picture projection. These sets will change 50- or 60-cycle alternating current from the power lines into suitable direct current for the motion picture machine arc.

The line includes sets driven by single- or polyphase, squirrel-cage, squirrel-motors or by high-reactance, squirrel-cage, induction motors. All sets are given a continuous rating in kilowatts, ranging from 1.6 kilowatts on some types to 30 kilowatts on others, and are designed to carry overloads of approximately 100 per cent for periods of three minutes occurring at 15-minute intervals. The continuous rating in amperes ranges from 20 on some types to 300 amperes on others, and the overload capacity is provided to carry the load during periods when the arcs are being changed over.

A line of generator panels for wall mounting, suitable for use with these sets, is also announced by General Electric. The panels mount a direct-current ammeter, direct- current volt-meter and a generator field rheostat, all in a sheet metal enclosing case. The side of this cabinet is removable to permit easy access to the back of the panel.

The ballast rheostats designed for use with these sets include a starting section, a permanent resistance section and a section for regulation with seven regulating points. The proper regulating point is selected by means of a dial switch mounted on the front of the panel. The rheostats are rated from 20 to 200 amperes.

Washer Unit Developed for Blower Cooling Systems

A NEW feature developed by the engineers of the Supreme Heater and Ventilating Corporation, makers of heating and cooling systems, has been introduced by that company. The new development consists of an air-washing unit for installation in the wall-opening through which the cooling system gets its air-supply. The device, known as the Supreme Turbo Air-Washing Unit, will be offered in connection with installations of the Supreme cooling system. It is a separate unit with a self-contained motor and can be installed, without structural changes, to blower systems now in use.

The unit, placed at the intake opening, throws a fine, foggy water mist, which freshens and cools the incoming air as it passes to the blower, which discharges the air to the auditorium.

The unit is equipped with a long flexible cord and plug which can be plugged into any light socket. Its installation requires only a shelf placed at the wall-opening to hold the washer unit. A reserve water tank is placed in the water line between the unit and the supply pipe. The operation of the unit is simple and requires a minimum of attention. It is switched on and off and its speed regulated in a manner requiring no more skill than the similar operation of the small electric fan. A balanced all-steel wheel eliminates vibration and side sway and its construction is such that it operates noiselessly.

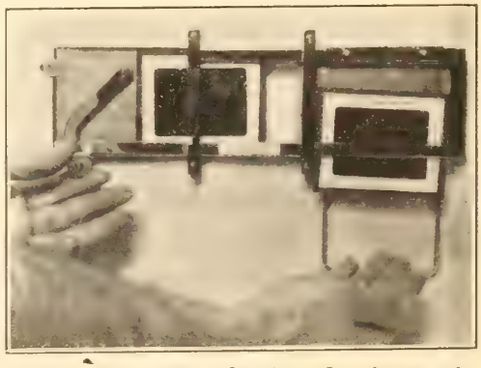
Slide Carrier Designed for Using Slides in Turn



ILLUSTRATED on this page is a slide carrier invented by Solomon Meyer, a projectionist of Cape Town, South Africa. The carrier is designed for using slides in turn and delivers the slide to the projection aperture by means of a hand-operated lever, which throws the slide into place and automatically removes the previously used slide into a slot from which it is removed by hand.

The first slide is put into the slide holder when fully open as shown. The slide holder is then pushed forward, and after it is drawn back again the slide is left in proper position over the light opening in place to be properly projected. The second slide is then put into the vacant position and when the slide holder is again pushed, the first slide will be delivered into the cradle and the second will be left in the projecting position. The first slide before dropping into the cradle passes into the position, which is directly over the opening leading to the cradle. A spring engages the slide and so causes this forward projection. When, however, it reaches the opening it drops to the bottom of the cradle where it is received upon cushioning members. While dropping through the opening the plate is guided by a roller.

Arranging Organ Scores to Suit the Film and Audience Taste

Tom Terry Outlines His Method in Speech to Guild Members

TOM TERRY, organist of Loew's State theatre, St. Louis, and inventor of a miniature organ console which he uses for novelty effects there, told members of the American Guild of Organists that he developed the device with the hope of influencing the officials in New York against the community singing and slides.

Terry, who is one of the leading theatre organists and is noted for his skilful scoring for motion picture accompaniments, was invited to address the meeting of American Guild organists held in St. Louis on March 26.

He has long been recognized in music circles of the Middle West as one of the outstanding proponents of high class organ music—whether played in the classical or popular vein—and his interpretation in a popular way of the standard works has been accepted by leading teachers. He commands a large following among the motion picture patrons of St. Louis.

In his address before the organists, Terry told just how the organists of the leading motion picture theatres prepare their organ accompaniments to co-ordinate with the balance of the show, particularly with the featured screen attraction of the bill. Describing his method of scoring and the opinions which he harbors with regard to developing a higher standard of music for these popular renditions, Terry said:

"First we have a miniature theatre under the auditorium, which we call the projection room. We have an extra operaator at my disposal to review all the pictures well in advance of their presentation at the theatre. I cue each and every action of the picture, and, as you know, ararnge a score to coincide with it.

"Now it is not only notes I pick out, as I have my music arranged in a sort of psychological order. I am as proud of this repertoire as a boy would be of his stamp collection, because music is not only a business with me; it's a hobby as well.

"Regarding moods in classification, you know of course that some of our leading sypmphony conductors find it very difficult to follow with a brilliant program after a program of Tschaikowsky has been played, and find it more advantageous to break in a new number after a Wagnerian program has been concluded.

"The reaction to music is emotional, we agree, and music affects the nerves of the auditor. Only a few weeks ago I was talking to a nerve specialist who has observed the reaction of inmates of insane asylums to various types of music. With the physicians of the staff the specialist watched the effects produced on these people by the different styles of music. The violent patient became calmer when listening to a movement of pathetic characteristic, the theme with pathos acting as a sedative. But at the introduction of a discord, or even an accentuation, the auditors were immediately stimulated and became unnerved. A jazz theme made them stare. This is really one of the intelligent reasons in explanation of the popularity of jazz, which does not affect us mentally but which is in demand because the younger generation likes a stimulative reaction. The older folks desire a sedative.

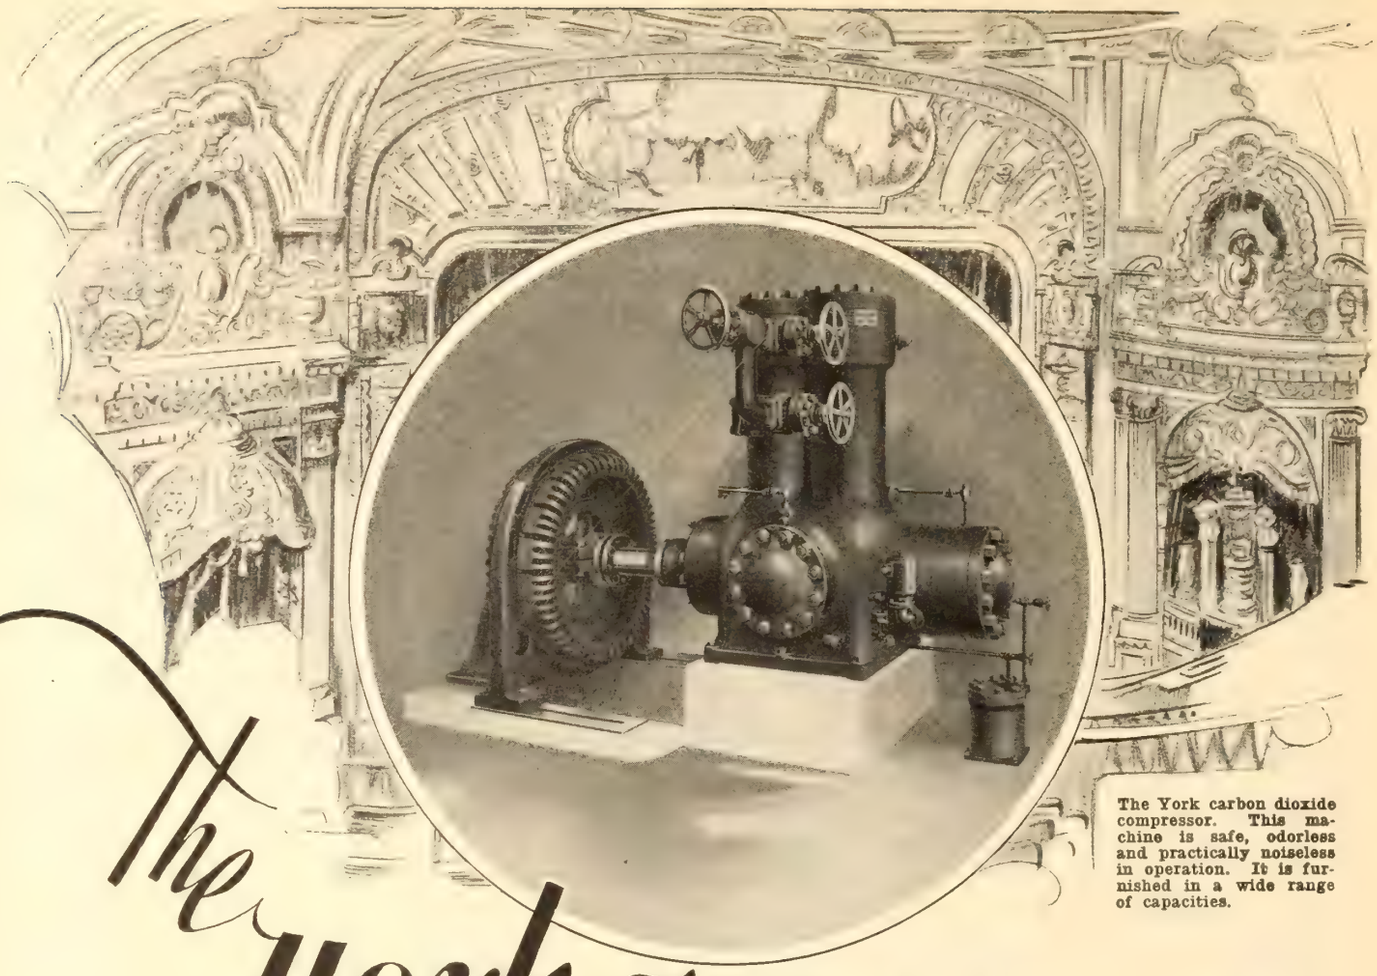
"We all know that musical literature should be punctuated the same as any other literature. If I ask a question my voice remains either in the same tone or finishes a little higher. If I pronounce something that is absolutely known to be correct and make it emphatic, I accentuate if I finish my sentence with a period that is considered at the end.

"Now there is not a bit of difference between this and your phrasing. The psychology that exisits in music is nothing more than taking these fundamentals into consideration and arranging your score to fit the picture, just as you would a grand opera, musical comedy or ballet. We have writers today who compose special compositions to standard poems, and phrasing them to fit the number they ing than to melody.

"There is absolutely no difference between this and arranging a musical score to assist the performers on the screen, only you have to exaggerate more in accomplishing the latter effect, as they need more emphatic assistance from the music. The conversation, action, character, locale, and many other things must be taken into consideration by the musician scoring a motion picture.

"I USE the conductor's score orchestral part almost exclusively. And why? The instrumentation, intonation, and everything else is there entirely, with possibly a few inversions. But is played practically note for note, and that is imperative when playing with an orchestra.

"I think one of the most significant words in music is 'anticipation,' whether it be diminuendo, fortisismo, etc., or a climax, and this properly carried out prepares your audience for the approaching dramatic effects on the screen. Anticipation is equally essential when playing with an orchestra, and also when playing for a performer or a performance.



"I hardly believe in playing and working up numbers the way they were intended and as written by the composer, but I do not overlook the fact that the good Lord gave me intelligence to revise, reconstruct, emphasize, anticipate, exaggerate, or contemplate any musical composition to fit the occasion, regardless who the composer might be.

"I DON'T like church music in a theatre for many reasons, and avoid it as much as possible. I feel that the church organist in his proper environment, the church or concert hall, occupies a place of great dignity. But I believe the church organist and the theatre organist are two entirely different music forms and as distinctly separate as the physician and the surgeon. Each is a specialist in his line, and each should be conscientious in his work as a musician.

"If I am in doubt as to anything in music, whether it be on your subject or mine, I will ask anyone whom I think competent to inform me and be guided by the answer, and I think all of us would be benefited by a consultation once in a while—it would do us good. We would feel closer together and we would all learn something. Each of us has a little specialty we are particularly versed in and have a special leaning for, and it is no reflection on any of us to ask questions, to practice and to try by any means to improve our work.

"We all have views and the majority on different subjects, and the other fellow's interpretation may be superior to ours, if not in all matters at least on certain matters.

"In closing I would like to tell you that I have invented a miniature console of two manuals. This will play the auditorium organ from the stage, either in a presentation, with orchestra, or in an act. I developed it with the hope of influencing the higher officials in New York to do away with the terrible community singing and the slides and help a bit toward the educating of the public to a better class of music for theatre organ solos. I have been working especially on this, and I insist on playing the very best possible music during the screening of the picture. If all of us who are theatre organists would work in this direction, I believe it would be a large factor in creating a popular demand for the better type of music."

Library Cooperation

And How it May Be Developed By Showmen

By Ina Roberts

Press Representative, Cleveland Public Library

LIBRARY cooperation with motion picture presentations has developed a definite plan or technic, the fundamental of which is that the producer or distributor of the film must actively cooperate with libraries if their films are to enjoy the benefits from library publicity during local presentations.

The very essence of the library-theatre tie-up demands an amount of advance preparation which is necessary in but few of the other mediums of publicity. This of course is the listing of literary works contained in the library and dealing with subjects treated in the story or locale of the film. Naturally this entails some research and requires time. Consequently the best results are obtained both for the theatre exhibiting the picture and the library cooperating with it when adequate preparation has been made and the book marks and bulletin board and window or table displays are arranged with a large number of books topically associated with the characters, story or background depicted in the motion picture.

The exhibitor desirous of developing this form of cooperative publicity would do well to make the beginning by supplying the local library with a press book and stills on some picture having historical or scene elements which lend themselves to this sort of publicity well in advance of its play date at his house.

As as illustration of the work that is done by the Cleveland Public Library in connection with motion pictures, the following detailed outlines of two very successful campaigns are included here. It will be seen that there is considerable advance work necessary to develop the full resources of the subject in these cooperative campaigns.

"The King of Kings" was especially well handled in Cleveland and the interest created through the campaign was reflected at the library as well as the theatre. Stills and a press sheet on this picture were obtained in the Spring of 1927.

The one hundred-or-so stills received suggested at once that many of the scenes must have been reproductions of well-known paintings, so a letter was sent to the De Mille studio, asking what about this. In reply came a set of the stills copied from or suggested by famous religious paintings, also photographs of the paintings themselves. About ten days before "The King of Kings" opened at the Ohio theatre eight exhibits were in place in the Main Cleveland Public Library. One, in the east street show-window, was given an exceedingly soft and beautiful effect by a poster in blue and gold, the large sepia photographs and books with rich Oriental colors predominating in their bindings.

The books used were "Silver Cross" (Sue); "Jesus for Men of Today" (Gilbert); "Private Life of the Romans" (Johnston); "Art Studies in the Life of Christ" (Bailey); "Century of Excavation in Palestine" (Macalister); "Imperial Rome" (Nilsson); "City of the Great King" (Phelps); "Radiant Story of Jesus" (Seche); "Gospel in Art" (Bailey); "Life in the Roman World" (Tucker); "Tarry Thou Till I Come" (Croly); "Prince of the House of David" (Ingraham); "Mary Magdalen" (Saltus); "Barabbas" (Corelli); "Life of the Ancient East" (Baikie); "The Man Christ Jesus" (Dawson); "Life of Jesus of Nazareth" (Rhees); "Holy Land" (Hichens); "Jesus of Nazareth" (Barton); "Life of Christ" (Papini); "Story of the Other Wise Man" (Van Dyke); two "Reading With a Purpose" Pamphlets, "Life of Christ" and Religion in Everyday Life"; and "The Spell of the Holy Land" by Archie Bell, a well-known travel writer and a Cleveland man.

In two large show-cases in the second floor corridor were 44 stills, both sepia and black and white, numerous books opened at outstanding illustrations and two copies of "The King of Kings" special program.

The Philosophy and Religion Division posted stills 305, 567, 794, 925, 950, 461, 702 with jackets of various lives of Christ. The Literature Division used stills 971, 609, 411 and 461 with a poster "The King of Kings; Story by Jeanie Macpherson." The Fiction Division arranged a Winged Frame display with stills 699 and 97 and jackets of the following books: "Mary of Magdala" (Bell); "Dawn" (Bacheller); "Life and Teachings of Jesus" (Bosworth); "The Holy Land" (Finnemore); "Jesus of Nazareth" (Klaussner); "Man Nobody Knows" (Barton); "Life of Christ" (Papini). The History Division had two exhibits: one on a bulletin board, with still 689 and a review of the photoplay and the other a cradle of books topped by a poster and stills oto and 77. The books here used come under the head of travel or history: "Trip to Palestine and Syria" (Hackenbroch); "History of Rome to 565 A.D." (Boak); "Out of Doors in the Holy Land" (Van Dyke); "Hilltops in Galilee" (Speakman); "Studies in Galilee" (Masterman); "City of Jerusalem" (Conder); "Palestine of the Mandate" (Worsfold); "Imperial Purple" (Saltus); "Today in Palestine" (Dunning); "Going Down from Jerusalem" (Duncan); "Pilgrim in Palestine" (Finley).

Perfect Illumination Control for the Modern Theater

When the emergency lighting plant functions to illuminate the way to the exits! The photo above shows a theatre, equipped with an automatically controlled emergency lighting system as it appears when the main source of light current is cut off.

Automatic Control of Theatre Emergency Lighting Systems

IN many cities it has been written into the regulations of the local Board of Underwriters or city ordinances that switches must be provided in all theatres or public auditoriums to automatically throw on the emergency lighting system upon the failure of the main service.

As emergency systems of storage batteries, motor-generator sets or other outside source are compulsory, it would naturally follow that their operation should be automatic and not dependent upon the manual operation by the house electrician or whoever may be in charge. In times of fire or panic the lights may go out, and darkness might cause disastrous results to the audience pushing toward exits which cannot be seen.

In a recent survey of the entire United States made by "Motion Picture News" it was learned that there is a wide discrepancy not only in the codes of different localities, but also in the opinions of those controlling emergency systems. Many of the larger cities have adopted automatic throw-over or transfer switches and have made their use compulsory.

On the other hand there are a great many cities where this feature is not recognized. Some localities specify that the emergency service be connected back to of the main fuses, while others go so far as to require two independent auxiliary current supplies.

In answer to the question "Are emergency lighting plants or systems required as part of the electrical installations in motion picture theatres in your city?" approximately 65 per cent answered "Yes." Of this number about 50 per cent had automatic control. Of the number of cities that that did not have compulsory emergency lighting, about 20 per cent put them in, anyway. These figures are exceedingly representative, as they cover every section of the country. The wide variation in the reports shows the need for a uniform code.

The particular lights controlled by the emergency circuit generally include exits, foyers, lobbies, aisles, corridors and all parts of the theatre which would enable the audience to leave in case of trouble.

The double throw or transfer switches which are used to control these lights are of the Remote Control type-usually consisting of a relay and two mechanically interlocked switch units. Upon the failure of the normal service the relay makes contact between the auxiliary source and the closing coils of that switch unit, energizing them and thereby closing that side of the switch. At the same time the opening coils of the main unit are energized and that side of the switch is thrown open. When the normal service is renewed the reverse action takes place and the switch is automatically thrown to its original position. In this way the performance goes on as usual, and it is not necessary for anyone to pay any attention whatsoever to the changeover.

Remote-Control switches of similar type have many other uses in theatres and many interesting circuits have been worked out in connection with them to accomplish economical wiring and complete control. One of the common uses of these switches is in connection with the control from the projection booth.

Burnside to Stage Publix Shows

R. H. Burnside, long associated with Charles H. Dillingham and producer of many notable stage spectacles, including the Dillingham shows staged at the New York Hippodrome previous to its conversion to vaudeville under the current Keith-Albee regime, will join the Publix Theatre production department early this month, it was announced this week by Sam Katz, head of the Publix circuit.

Burnside will stage Publix unit shows in alternation with John Murray Anderson and Frank Cambria. Jack Partington will be supervising producer under James M. Cowan, director in chief of the Publix stage productions.

Burnside produced for Charles Dillingham the following: "Over the River," with Eddie Foy; "The Lady of the Slipper" and "Chin Chin," with Montgomery and Stone; "Watch Your Step" for Castles; "Stop, Look and Listen" for Gaby Desleys; "Hip, Hip Hooray" and "The Big Show."

For Cohan and Harris he staged "The Beauty Shop" and among earlier productions well remembered by the average theatre lover, "The Runaways," "The Emerald Isle," "The Tourists," in which Julia Sanderson and William Hodge appeared; "The Social Whirl," "The Gay White Way," "The Earl and the Girl," "Happyland" and "The Pied Piper."

Still later he wrote and produced "Sporting Days," "A Trip to Japan" and the "International Cup," each of which ran a year, and among others in the Burnside list are "The Grand Duchess," "La Perichole" and "Lady Teazle," all for Lillian Russell; "The Little Trooper" and "Fleur de Lis" for Della Fox, "The Jolly Musketeer" and "The Royal Rogue" for Jefferson de Angelis; "The Girl from Montmartre" and "The Red Rose."

Although the Hippodrome marks the very acme of his success the staging of "The Emerald Isle," "Lady Teazle," "The Mocking Bird," "Happyland," "Fantana," "The Earl and the Girl," "Sergeant Kitty," "Fascinating Flora," "The Tourists," and many other popular musical hits have each been noteworthy accomplishments. The three latter operas Mr. Burnside is the author of as well, for, although he has been an actor since his sixth year, and a stage manager since his eighteenth, he has yet found time to add opera writing to his achievements.

Mr. Burnside was born in Neilson, a little town near Glasgow in Scotland. His father was a stage manager and his mother was the famous actress, Marguerite Thorne, long associated with Wilson Barrett. He was about eight years old when he first came to this country, and at the age of twenty-four he had become the stage manager of the famous "Bostonians."

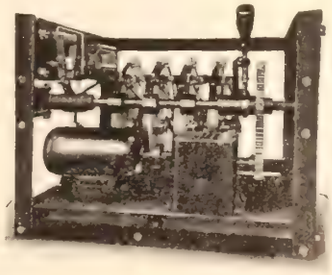
WARD LEONARD VITROHM DIMMERS...THE ACCEPTED STANDARD FOR LIGHTING CONTROL

CONTROLLED LIGHT

Is Light Made Valuable



The Vitrohm Dimmer Plate incorporates more than 36 years of manufacturing experience. It possesses the qualities of maximum watt dissipation with light weight and unlimited life.

The type illustrated is the "SRD" Plate, a non-interlocking dimmer, described in Bulletins 67 and 72.

Banks of dimmer plates, shown above, for wall mounting are very flexible in application. This type of dimmer has interlocking controls; that is, each plate may be operated independently, or in conjunction with one or more of the other plates.

These dimmers are described in Bulletins 72 and 75.

Motor driven dimmers are used where manual control is not desirable and where dimmer control must be exercised from remote points. Descriptions are found in Bulletins 67, 72 and 75.

Investigate The Possibilities Of *VITROHM Controlled Lighting for Lodge, Church, Theatre and Store

THE acceptance of accurately controlled lighting as an aid to decorative and publicity plans is widespread.

In the theatre, this acceptance is universal; no modern performance could be given without controlled lighting. The influence of the theatre's success with this medium led to its trial, both as a purely decorative aid, and for sustaining background, as in the theatre, in practically all fields.

If you are interested in securing new and unusual effects in church and lodge halls, theatres, and stores, or in the floodlighting of signs and buildings, get in touch with the engineering department of WARD LEONARD. Our engineers are at your service, without obligation to you, in determining the extent to which controlled lighting is of value in your possible application.

The Use of Colored Borders in Motion Picture Presentations

IT was the early thought in "Movies" that the best projection results were obtained by making the contrast between the projected picture and its immediate surroundings as great as possible.

From the standpoint of a maximum visibility this extreme contrast idea appeared to be perfectly logical, and, in some respects, necessary, because the illuminating systems in early use were barely powerful enough to take care of the ordinary requirements of projection.

Until the efficiency of these illuminators, along with the introduction of brighter light sources, had been increased, there was little hope of accomplishing anything in the way of both decorative and utilitarian lighting while projection of the picture was in progress.

One of the first steps to be taken, after increased screen intensities were possible. was in the form of utilitarian lighting in that the entire auditorium of the theatre was illuminated to a degree which permitted relatively easy access to vacant seats.

Even this first move toward wore reasonably visual conditions within the theatre was attended with great caution for fear that this general illumination of the auditorium might "spill over" and act to bad advantage on the screen picture. To prevent this from occurring, it was recommended that the intensity of illumination be graded from a very low figure near the screen to a much higher value at the rear of the theatre.

In line with these precautions, no illuminated areas were permitted to be within the field of vision as one looked toward the screen from any seat in the house, which meant that the screen picture dominated the observer's view to the total exclusion of everything else.

The need for this strict adherence to the "extreme contrast" plan no longer exists, fortunately, because light sources and optic system are available which easily are capable of providing sufficient screen light to permit obtaining more enjoyable viewing conditions during the course of projection.

It is clear that these possibilities are receiving attention because theatres already are extending the illuminated decorative schemes, heretofore confined entirely to the sidewalls, up to the very edge of the screen itself where the policy of the house is that of the straight picture type.

Those theatres having a mixed program of pictures and presentations, also, are endeavoring to make use of the same idea and it is not at all uncommon for an observer, when seated in one of these theatres, to be able to see the entire front of the house in a comfortable fashion during picture projection.

What would amount to rank heresy in the old days is the practice in many theatres of projecting a flood of colored light, such as blue, over the entire stage opening while song slides are being shown. The footlights are commonly used for this purpose, although flood lamps in the projection room have been used on occasions.

And so, step by step, we see a constant shift toward more normal visual conditions until it now seems more logical to suppose that a semi-daylight, rathre than a moonlight, condition during projection will be the thing of the near future.

With the bugaboo of the "extreme contrast" idea dispelled and found to be harmless, exhibitors have available a wide variety of novel effects which can be employed to greatly enhance the projection of motion pictures.

The more successful of these effects make use of colored light which is projected as a border around the screen picture. While it is true that special apparatus is required for many of these effects, some very pretty ones can be obtained with comparatively little effort and expense and without the need of equipment other than that ordinarily employed on the stage.

THE technic of using colored borders around motion pictures is not yet thoroughly understood and the exhibitor, for this reason should proceed cautiously, making his own experiments as he does so.

The indiscriminate use of color should be avoided and rarely is it possible to leave the colored border stand for the complete program. The intensity to which the colored border is illuminated, is of great importance, because it is necessary that the screen picture dominates the general field of view. The intensity of the border lighting should never be greater than one-third that of the screen picture and for safety it is better to cut this down to one-quarter in order to allow the changes in film density.

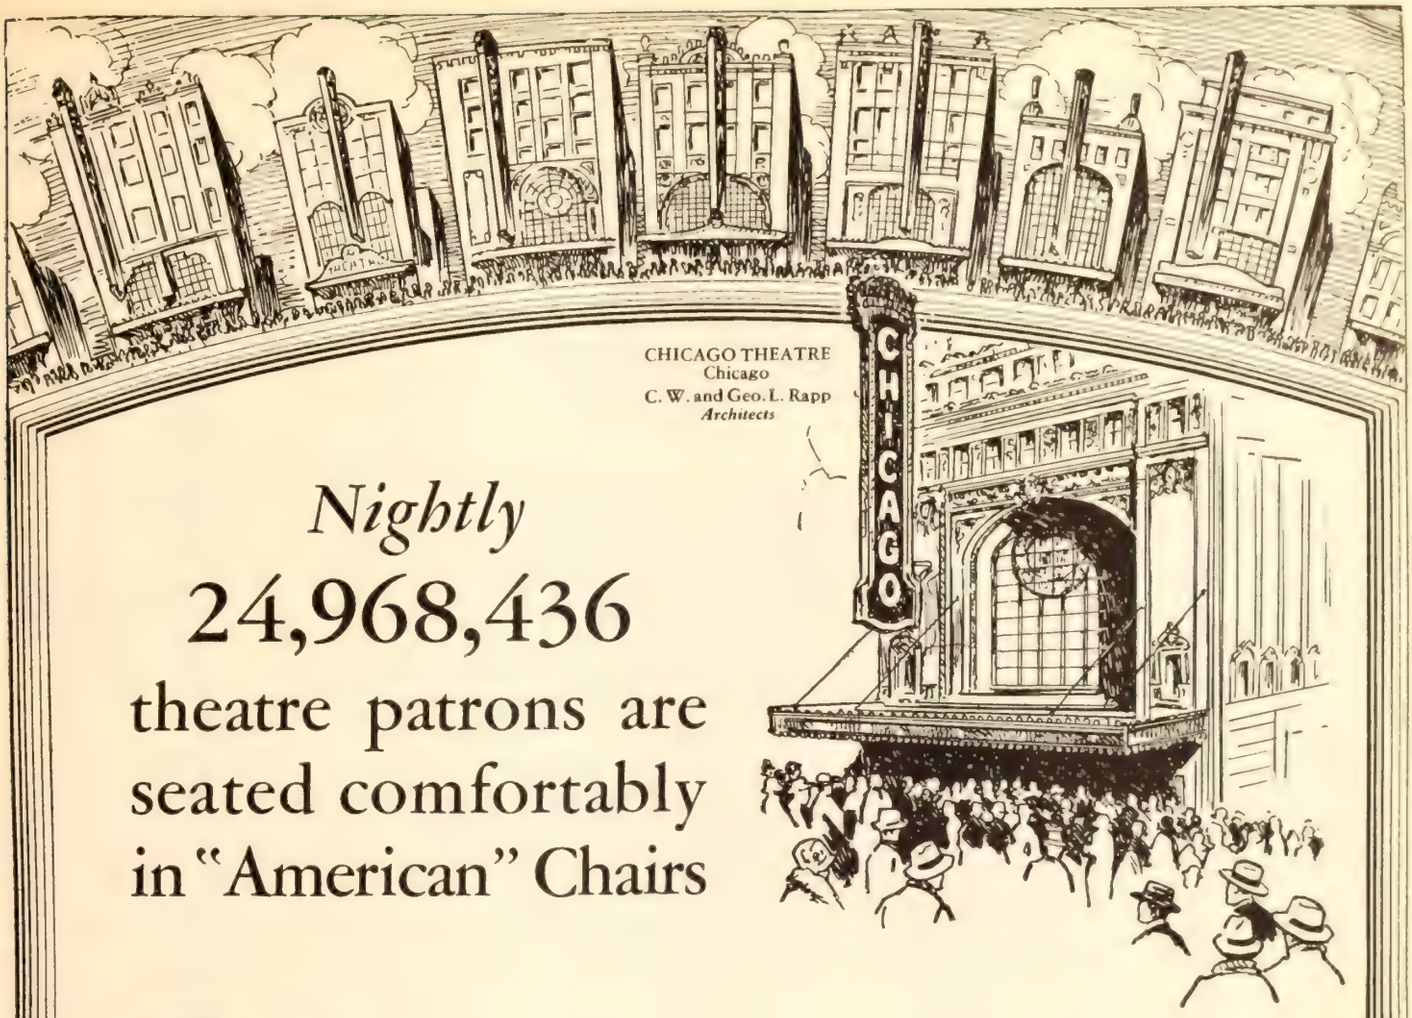
In some respects, plain colors are to be preferred to intricate designs projected in sharp relief as the latter are too likely to conflict with the sharply imaged motion picture. It is essential that the boundaries of the motion picture be clearly defined in order to focus, and then hold, the attention of observers on the picture action. This is more easily accomplished where the border lighting scheme differs pronouncedly from the screen picture.

A simple border design in conjunction with a sharply focussed picture is one method of assuring satisfactory results. Another is to preselect the border colors so that similar colors do not appear in the motion picture, else a conflict of colors in border and picture will surely result.

These facts, simple though they may seem, have been learned by experience and if the exhibitor will but recognize them they can be used as stepping stones to assist him toward working out an endless variety of original and beautiful effects which will go a long way toward offsetting that peculiar "sameness" which seems to pervade all motion picture theatres wherein the only difference lies in the feature being presented.

Specific methods for projecting colored lighting borders around motion pictures make use of equipment housed either in the projection room or contained entirely on the stage.

Special machinery is not always required, although it will permit a more flexible working arrangement, thus leading to a greater variety of effects which can be quickly changed at will.



Probably the simplest method of obtaining satisfactory border lighting effects is that used in the Roxy theatre, where the motion picture screen (a true rectangle and with corners of the aperture plates filed out to cast a picture with sharp corners) is suspended from three sides—top, left side, and right side—in a border of white guaze after the fashion of a scrim.

The gauze is gathered toward the screen in folds which give the appearance of streamers radiating from the screen as a center. The bottom side of the screen, during projection, rests upon the floor of the stage and the entire outfit, screen and gauze border, is flyed to permit of its being raised above the proscenium.

BEHIND the motion picture screen are placed two sets of lamps so placed that they project their light into the gauze surrounding the screen. These lamps are of two colors, pink and green, and connected to dimming resistance so that one set can be slowly raised in intensity while the other is being reduced.

In this manner, a change of color can be effected so slowly that the observer, intent upon the picture, is hardly conscious of the change until the second color reaches full brilliance. A gradation from high intensity close to the screen to a low intensity away from the screen also results, which seems to add greatly the general effect.

An effect approaching this can also be obtained from the projection room, where using the same type of screen and border, a stereopticon projector equipped with a suitable mash, for shielding the screen, is employed to project a colored illumination onto the border.

Auditorium Lighting Serves Two Purposes

fully planned so that the architectural detail will appear at its best at all times.

In the type of auditorium representing an outdoor setting, as a garden or a Spanish patio, the general illumination can be provided by coves throwing light on the arched ceiling. During the presentation of the picture, low intensity lighting may be provided by hidden effect machines which project moving clouds and blue sky on the ceiling dome. A large number of lighting units, with tiny openings, are sometimes recessed in the ceiling to simulate stars. The windows of houses may be lighted, lanterns hung in the doorways, lighted urns placed in wall niches, and statuary and other artistic objects accentuated by spotlights.

The use of spotlights and floodlights in lighting statuary and bas-reliefs must receive careful attention as harsh shadows or shadows in the wrong direction may distort the appearance of an object in a very disagreeable manner.

If a piece of sculpture receives light from one direction only, the shadows may appear too harsh. On the other hand, however, it will not appear to best advantage under highly diffused illumination, as from an indirect system. The statutary lighting should, therefore, be so balanced that a predominance of light is received from one direction, with a small quantity furnished from other angles to soften the shadows.

Very beautiful and interesting effects are often obtained by using gelatin or glass colored screens on these small spots and floodlights to procure delicate touches of color which tend to enliven the whole scheme of decoration. By focusing two or more spots of different colors from different directions, on a sculptured object or a draped curtain, most striking combinations of tinted high lights and vari-colored shadows may be obtained. Another idea often used with success is that of equipping the spotlight with color wheels, which are slowly rotated by an electric motor, causing the object illuminated to assume constantly changing hues.

It is very important that all of the special lighting equipment be carefully concealed and that the direct rays from it be screened from the view of the audience. This can usually be accomplished by hiding the units behind projecting ornamentation, recessing them in the ceiling, or building special boxes and concealing drapes for them. When the light source is visible to the audience, louvres or spill shields should be provided in front of the lens or mouth of the projector.

When general color lighting from the coves or main lighting units is employed throughout the auditorium, the suggestive effects which the various colors have on the mind should be taken into account and used to the best advantage. During the summer months, for instance, the cool colors—greens and blues—may be used to accentuate the coolness of the theatre, while in the winter months the ambers and reds will add a sense of warmth.

Aside from the general appearance of the auditorium, there are several other lighting applications of a more or less utilitarian nature which must be noted. The music stand lights must be such that they will not prove annoying to the audience. In extreme cases the use of a green lamp in these is effective. During the playing of the overture the orchestra may be illuminated by floodlights concealed high in the ceiling above the pit in addition to spotlights from the front of the balcony or the projection booth.

To aid in seating the patrons, small aisle lights, close to the floor, should be provided at all steps and on several of the aisle seats. Seating indicator light systems, which keep the ushers posted as to which seats are unoccupied, are in successful use in many of the large theatres.

The exit lights which, are of course, a necessary feature, may often be incorporated in the interior design to present a pleasing appearance.

The theatre manager and decorator will find it well worth his while to become thoroughly acquainted with the possibilities of light in the theatre auditorium, as this knowledge will surely aid him materially providing the novel and pleasing touches so much appreciated.

Mobile Stage Platforms Equipped With Lifts

device is manufactured by the Gallagher Orchestra Equipment Company of Chicago and are made up of individual units which can be bolted together to form a complete rigid platform or separated for stage sets. The units are mounted on wheels, rubber tired and motor driven, and comprise three sections. The two rear sections can be raised and lowered individually or in unison and the entire platform propelled forward and back. Electric motors of ample power are provided for the propulsion of the platforms forward and back and the lifting and lowering of the sections.

The control switchboard is so arranged that it can be placed anywhere on the Mobile stage or main stage as desired, furthermore, prearragned movements can be set and operated from any part of the house.

Each unit runs on four wheels directly on the stage floor (there are no rails necessary). Limit switches are provided to prevent over travel up or down on the lift platforms and to prevent over travel backward or forward, a solenoid brake is installed.

The lift platforms are suspended from four posts by means of four bands of spring steel, one at each corner. The steel bands are connected to a shaft operated by a specially built winch which raises and lowers the platform at the will of the operator. Power is obtained for this purpose from 1/3 horsepower motors whose speed is reduced in a very compact specially designed winch, through a train of spur gears running in cast-iron housings on Timken roller bearings and provided with a mechanical brake to hold the platform in any position desired.

Neighborhood Theatres and Refrigeration Systems

PROGRESS made in the field of theatre cooling systems, particularly in the application of this modern convenience to the smaller theatre and the neighborhood house, forms an interesting and important subject in connection with any consideration of the architectural and engineering developments contributed by art and science to the advancement of the theatre as an all-year amusement resort. Just how much has been accomplished in the field of ventilation and the cooling systems which have changed the entire complexion of the motion picture theatre business—equipping it with the means of attracting patronage during summer as well as winter months—is the subject of the latest issue of The Weather Vein, the house organ of the Carrier Engineering Company, published quarterly.

On the Uses of Electrics for Frontal Display

THE new developments in electric display equipment for theatre fronts are the subject of a booklet issued by the Flexlume Corporation, manufacturers of signs and theatre marquees. The booklet includes a quantity of illustrations showing the newer designs for large and small theatres. In addition to their interest as illustrations of new models, the reproductions afford the theatre man examples of the proper use of selling lines on current and coming attractions and the distribution of lettering to obtain the balance and spacing needed to produce the best display effects.

Orchestraphone Used With "Simba" Road Show

SOUND reproduction devices for use in connection with motion picture presentations have figured prominently in new methods employed in the so-called road show field. "Simba," the Africa wild life picture produced by the Martin Johnsons and currently playing in New York at the Earl Carroll theatre and in Chicago at the Woods, has a complete score recorded on discs made by the Brunswick company. The musical accompaniment is supplied the Orchestraphone, developed for theatre use.

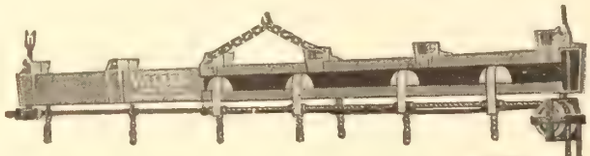
When You Flash This on your screen It Makes a BIG HIT!

Your patrons can tell, the moment they enter your theatre, whether or not you have a modern ventilating system. If the atmosphere is stuffy and close, they will hesitate a long time before again giving you their patronage. But—provide for them, and tell them about, the efficient system of Lakeside ventilation that creates and maintains a cool, comfortable atmosphere through every minute of the performance, and you may be sure of a steady stream of business.

Aggressive Houses Are Changing to This Modern Method of Ventilation

Theatres throughout the country find that Lakeside Ventilators assure the best equipment available today. Their tremendous power, quiet operation, and easy installation mean the utmost in service with practically no up-keep. Then, too, a Lakeside costs much less than many of the complicated cooling and ventilating systems on the market. You take no chances with Lakeside Equipment, because it is backed by a reliable guarantee. It must "make good" in actual service.

Empty Seats Pay No Profits



Competition is keen. Your theatre must be modernized in every way. You need an efficient ventilating system, and the Lakeside has been approved by ventilating engineers throughout the United States. Lakeside Ventilators are made in different sizes to meet every requirement and, if you will let us know the size, capacity, etc., of your theatre, we will be glad to submit suggestions and quotations without obligation to you. Write today for information.

James R. Cameron Publishes New Book on Projection

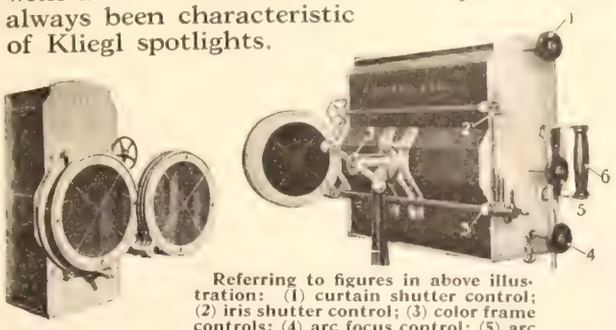
JAMES R. CAMERON'S new fourth edition of Motion Picture Projection is the most complete that has come from this well known and widely read authority on the subject. In the past five years there have been many new developments in the technical field of industry, and many new projection devices introduced on the market. Many of the most important developments have been so recent, comparatively, that earlier books afford no reference whereby the projectionist can be guided to a thorough understanding of vital factors affecting the craft.

The Vitaphone and Movietone installations are of fairly recent development, and the complete manner in which these installations are treated in the new volume prepared by Mr. Cameron in itself constitutes an important feature in recommending the work for the reference library of the student and the active study of the projectionist.

The various projection terms, the fundamentals of electricity as applied to projection, the use of rheostats, transformers, and are controllers, light, lenses and screen charts, diagrams of projecting machine construction, types of projectors (both professional and amateur) fuses, carbons, high intensity arc lamps, the new high-low lamps, reflector arcs, spotlights and effect projectors, projection room equipment, heating and cooling of theatres, curtain controls, motor generators, motors and their troubles; these are only a few of the many subjects covered and written about in a way that is readily understandable by managers as well as projectionists.

One can gain an idea of the comprehensive scope of the book, from the fact that it contains 1280 pages of text matter and over 550 illustrations, the book weighs over 3½ lbs., making it the largest book published on this subject.

Loew's Indianapolis House Reopens With New Policy



LOEW'S Palace theatre in Indianapolis opened on March 3rd with gala festivities. The theatre had been redecorated at a cost of $500,000 and inaugurated a policy of continuous shows of programs including pictures, stage presentation, band acts, and a pit orchestra for special overtures.

The house is located on Pennsylvania street and was given a big welcome by the Pennsylvania Street Business Association in page ads in all the daily newspapers and in the distribution of 25,000 mailed cards calling attention to the opening.

The Palace house manager is Howard W. Foreste, formerly of Reading, Pa. Teddy Joyce, formerly of the Capitol, New York, is master of ceremonies and in charge of the band during stage presentations. Emil Seidel directs the concert orchestra.

Library Cooperation and How It Is Developed

A "King of Kings" bookmark was prepared listing books as follows:

Lives of Christ—"Jesus of Nazareth" (Barton); "Life and Teachings of Jesus" (Bosworth); "Life of Christ" (Farrar); "Christ the Son of God" (Fouard); "Jesus of History" (Glover); "Life of Jesus of Nazareth" (Rhees); "Life of Jesus" (Renan).

Characters in the Photoplay—"These Twelve" (Brown); "Training of the Twelve" (Bruce); "Greater Men and Women of the Bible" (ed. Hastings).

Christ in Poetry—"Poet's Life of Christ" (Ault); "Christ in the Poetry of Today"; "The Radiant Tree" (Wilkinson).

Christ in Drama—"The Upper Room" (Benson); "Saint Claudia" (Goold); "Jesus" (Ehrmann); "The Rock—Simon Peter" (Hamlin); "The Terrible Meek" (Kennedy); "The Dark Hour" (Marquis); "The Trial of Jesus" (Masefield).

The Holy Land and the Holy City—"Holy Land" (Hichens); "The Syrian Christ" (Rhibany); "The Spell of the Holy Land" (Bell); "Out of Doors in the Holy Land" (Van Dyke); "Archaeology in the Holy Land" (Handcock); "A Pilgrimage to Palestine" (Fosdick); "Hilltop in Galilee (Speakman); "Springtide in Palestine" (Harry).

The Grandeur That Was Rome—"History of Rome" (Book); "The Grandeur That Was Rome" (Stobart); "Life in the Roman World" (Tucker); "The Jews Under the Roman Rule" (Morrison).

At the foot of the bookmark in a "frame" is the acknowledgment "Printed by the courtesy of Pathe and The Ohio Theatre Presenting The King of Kings."

Ten thousand of these bookmarks were distributed in the various libraries of the Cleveland public library system and thousands more in the Ohio theatre. Exhibitors who show this article to their local libraries will have no difficulty in effecting a tieup. Be sure to call attention to the list of books, as these will save libraries a great deal of work. The lists used will not be the same in all libraries, since all do not have quite the same books but the lists here given are valuable as a working basis in compiling others.

"Quality Street" provides an abundance of stills excellent for library use. This is a film ideal for library cooperation. The book connections, limited for the most part to the works of J. M. Barrie, are not as numerous as one could wish but they are good—and most libraries are well supplied with Barrie material.

An exhibit on a bulletin board just inside to the Main Cleveland Public Library bore, under the "Quality Street" sign, the sentiment: "Bide a Wee and 'Barrie' Awhile." The literature andfiction divisions arranged displays, as did also many of the stations and county libraries. The film, in itself and because of the book connections and the beautiful stills, merited a show-case exhibit but none was arranged for the reason that no advance screening was obtained for librarians to approve the film. This advance view of the film is in many cases essential if the Cleveland Library is to cooperate with a film; only in this way can the picture's connecting books and appropriateness for cooperation be learned in due season.

It seemed a pity, in view of the film and the appropriateness of its subject to library cooperation that "West Point" does not have connecting books in greater numbers. A public library does not willingly create a demand for books which are too popular to be available or which are non-existent. However, the Cleveland public library arranged three displays during the first run of this film, in the sociology, literature and fiction divisions.

Sociology used stills 272, 100, 18, 291, 83, 80, and 128; literature used 107, 187, 40, 99 and 14, and the fiction division used 15, 124 and 77. Some of the books featured were "The Plattsburg Movement" (Perry); "Building of an Army" (Dickinson); "West Point" (Richardson); "History of the United States Army" (Ganoe); "The Profession of Arms" (Colby); "West Point Yearling"; "Winning His Way to West Point" and "A West Point Lieutenant" (Malone); "Cadet Days" (King). The press sheet of the films contains directions as to how to honor the flag; these were clipped and posted with one exhibit.

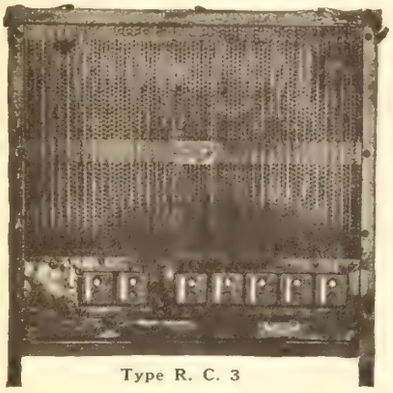
FOR SOUTHERN THEATRE ORGANS
Architects Specify Evenheeters

Architects all through the South realize the necessity of protecting the theatre organ not so much against cold alone but against dampness as well. Proximity to the ocean, sieges of damp, cold weather and seasons of rain makes Evenheeters a necessity.



Not only do Evenheeters warm your theatre organ to any desired temperature but they maintain that temperature throughout the whole organ chamber.

To all architects we ask an opportunity of explaining why Evenheeters are the only type organ heater that can heat the organ chamber correctly and why nationally known architects as Walter Ahlschlager, Rapp & Rapp and Eberson & Eberson endorse and specify Evenheeters for all the organ chambers they plan.

Merchandising Amusement at Community Theatres Through Local Contact and Education

By William H. McLaughlin

displeased by the noise and disturbance of the younger element, they will go elsewhere and you can never get them back.

To sum it all up, this business is no different than any other retail business. You are selling amusement across the footlights, instead of merchandise across the counter, and what is the most important factor in the sales' end of any business. After all there is no asset of business better than the personal touch. The tendency of business today is too mechanical, too soulless. That man is on the surest road to success who injects his personality into his business. Get out of your office, get from behind your mahogany desk when your customers are in your place of business, the theatre. Friendliness is the great overlooked asset in business.

Business is a human thing, made up of human beings and the calibre and personality of the men and women in any business or profession will pretty much determine its success. There is a cash value of personality in business.

Instead of spending a great deal of time figuring ways and means with which to fight the producer and distributor, spend some time in developing the right attitude toward your merchandise. Your indifferent advertising and listless attitude toward your own merchandise will reduce the customer's estimate to the level of your own indifference.

With all the selection of stories and casts, with the experts in exploitation, the standardization and efficiency in other departments in this industry, the people who meet the public (the exhibitor) are responsible for the final reputation of this business.

Personality is the sum total of your daily conduct, which causes people to like or dislike you, which causes them to respect you or not to respect you, which causes people to place confidence in you, or not to place confidence in you.

What is the deciding factor? In the final analysis other things being near equal, people are going to spend their money where they like the men and women with whom they are doing business. One thing is certain—they will not spend their money in any place of business where they do not like the men or women.

Your best advertisement is a satisfied customer. Your patrons appreciate the same thing in the conduct of your business that they see unfolded in the story on the screen. They want the human touch and anything that can redeem business and make it more human is necessary.

Drive Stimulates Patronage of Home Town Theatre

A "get the habit" campaign designed to promote patrongage of the local theatre and counteract a growing tendency of people in a small town to do their picturegoing at a nearby large city, is the method which has attained success for Richard L. Moss, manager of Block's Hawthorne theatre, Hawthorne, N. J.

Hawthorne is located two miles from Paterson, where there are four large picture houses. The Hawthorne is a new theatre, and he people were accustomed to go to Paterson and there attend the shows at the larger houses.

"To offset this," says Moss, "I started a 'Get the Habit' drive. I had posters and streamers reading 'Get the Habit—Go to Block's Hawthorne Theatre.' These were posted prominently in store windows and on front of the theatre. I also featured the catchline in the programs and in the newspaper advertisements, and induced a majority of the local merchants to insert my catchline in their ads. The campaign showed quick results and business started to improve almost immediately.

"I followed this up and with the introduction of special nights—hooking up with a college fraternity for 'The College Hero' engagement, for example. For the College Night I decorated the front with pennants and members of the fraternity cooperating with the house assembled outside and sang some college airs to the accompaniment of a uke. This stunt was followed by the use of a laughing record on a phonograph installed in the lobby for a display on 'The Gay Retreat,' and a mystery prologue for 'The Cat and the Canary.'"

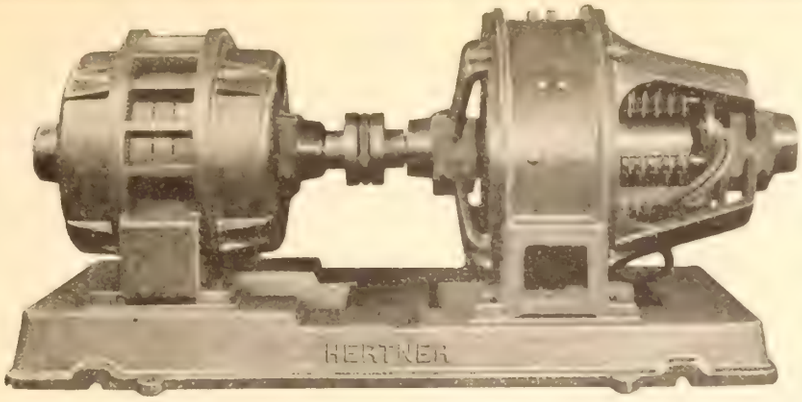
Rialto Reaches Peak for Opening Day Receipts

While almost every new attraction that has played the Rialto theatre in New York since its conversion to a long-run policy has delivered a gross return greater than the previous record, the figure attained by "The Legion of the Condemned," current feature, on its first two days is believed by Publix officials to represent the maximum capacity of the house irrespective of the demand for seats.

"The Legion of the Condemned" drew more than 22,000 people to the Rialto over its first Saturday and Sunday and thereby bettered by $2,000 all previous records.

While there is great enthusiasm on the part of the Publix officials over the attraction value of this picture, which is expected to set a long run mark for itself at the Times Square house, the theatre's policy is credited with having developed a following and prestige which importantly affects new openings. The Rialto consistently has operated on a long-run basis with a succession of outstanding pictures and has presented them at popular prices. No elaborate supporting bills are offered with the features, the program usually consisting of the feature, a news reel and an overture by the orchestra.



"Moving Stills" Displayed in Window Attractor

Manager J. P. Harrison made excellent use of a vacant store in the heart of the business district for a window stunt on Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy," playing at the Publix Victory theatre, Waco, Texas.

A cut-out head of Lloyd with the eyes carved out was the only object apparently visible from the outside as the window was air brushed with the exception of that portion showing the Lloyd cut-out.

Signs on the outside of the window on either side of the cut-out inside read, "Take a Real Look—It's Free" and "Free! Moving Pictures of Harold Lloyd in GRANDMA'S BOY."

By peering into Lloyd's eyes you could see moving stills of Grandma's Boy. Here's how it was done: Taking a large circular piece of beaverboard on which were pivoted four stills from the picture, this disc was made to revolve—producing the moving pictures. By pivoting the stills on disc, they swung straight up and down at any position.

Testing the Lens

All but one of the aberrations described in the last issue may afflict the photographic lens with which the picture was made. In projecting film it is often difficult to determine whether the fault lies in the projection lens or in the photographic lens. Chromatic aberration is the exception; color fringes on the screen are due only to the projection lens.

In no moving picture does the film run through the film gate absolutely flat but always buckles and flutters more or less due to heat and other conditions, so that the quality of the screen image is constantly changing.

For these reasons it is much better to test the lens with a stationary target which, because of the heat in the film gate, best takes the form of a thin sheet of metal, perforated with small holes. This should be absolutely flat and if it has buckled, in time, due to heat, it must be flattened again. The metal being perfectly opaque and the holes being perfectly transparent yield a maximum degree of contrast which is constant for any test. It is only by means of a target, such as the one described, that a fair comparison can be made between several different lenses.

French Suspend Drastic Decree

Negotiations Conducted by Will Hays with Government Bring Hope That Situation Will Work Out Satisfactorily

AN important development in the Franco-American film situation occurred this week when the French Cinema Commission announced that operation of the drastic decree had been temporarily suspended. This follows the negotiations conducted by Will H. Hays in Paris with French government officials and leaders of the industry there, and is taken as a hopeful sign that the serious situation will be worked out satisfactorily.

The suspension will last from three to four months, and the purpose is stated as being to give the French producers a chance to increase their production to 150 pictures a year. Now, they are making about 50.

While the decree still stands, the suspension is regarded, in some quarters as a move toward harmony. In other quarters, however, this optimistic view is not taken.

Under the law a commission of 32 men is set up, all of the members of which hold offices irrevocably for three years. Sixteen of these men are from the various government ministries and the other sixteen include producers, distributors, exhibitors, authors, actors, directors and the like, from the French industry. Here is the law which they were to have administered:

Article I.—The year will run from October 1st to September 30th, except that this year a short period is set aside of from March 1st to September 30th.

Article II.—All French films, unless they contain matter harmful to public morals or peace, will be given a visa for their exhibition.

Article III.—A film which is entirely French in all its elements, except for 25 per cent of the leading players, shall be considered of the First Category. Others, with foreign companies, stories, directors, or such elements, is of the Second Category, but must be at least 50 per cent French.

Article IV.—A French company may make one film of the Second Category for each two of the First.

Article V.—Every French film must be of sufficient importance to do credit to the French industry (thereby eliminating the shoddy, low-price picture made solely to obtain import visas).

Article VI.—Five hundred foreign films may be brought into France during the 18 months from March 1, 1928, to September 30, 1929. This may be modified if exhibitors find this inadequate.

Article VII.—For each French film sold to America, a distributor may bring in four American films; for each film sold to Germany, two German films; for each film sold to England, one British film.

Article VIII.—These import regulations do not apply to films not longer than 600 metres (about 1,900 feet).

Article IX.—When shown to the commission for approval, each foreign film must be shown in exactly the form in which it was shown in the country of origin, with a guaranteed literal translation of the original titles, which must be left in the picture. (This to stop practice of re-editing films objectionable to France for showing here.)

Article X.—The commission reserves the right to entirely bar from France the films of any company which shall show in its own country a picture tending to taint the name of France.

Opinion Differs on Broadcast

Consensus Is That It Does Not Stimulate Admissions and That Similar Programs Will Not Be Repeated

THE Dodge hour in which the stars of United Artists broadcast a program over fifty-five radio stations last Thursday night has brought varying reports from exhibitors and motion picture officials in cities throughout the United States. As a result it is considered not likely that a similar program will be repeated by motion picture stars in the future.

From some quarters comes the word that theatre audiences were considerably disillusioned over the stars, while others contend that many stay-at-homes would be converted to the movie houses as a result of the program. Mostly, however, the opinion seems to prevail that the stars hardly did themselves justice and that their efforts in the future would be more appreciated if confined to the screen. It was also contended that the radio hour did not serve to stimulate business while the program was being rendered.

Rainy weather in the east last Thursday night might have been responsible for a slight falling off of business. Publix reported that business was not quite up to par between 9 and 10 o'clock when Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, D. W. Griffith, Norma Talmadge, John Barrymore and Dolores Del Rio. From different parts of New York it was reported that audiences expressed their disapproval in no uncertain terms, even to the extent of catcalls and urging that it be "taken off."

There were many conflicting opinions in Albany, N. Y., as well as among exhibitors in the surrounding territory. Exhibitors, however, were a unit when it came to agreeing that the reception over the air could not possibly have been worse, due to the huge amount of static that put in its appearance about thirty minutes before the program went on. Two of Albany's theatres installed radios for the occasion, advertising the fact in the newspapers and as a result these two houses played to almost double ordinary business. There is no question but that the program given by the motion picture stars cut into attendance figures, particularly among the neighborhood houses.

Exhibitors of Cleveland do not like the idea of having the movie stars participate in radio programs. But, inasmuch as a movie star radio program was arranged before they had a chance to register their objections, they made the best of it, and incorporated the radio program in their regular programs whenever it was possible. Loew's Stillman, State and Circle, all provided with Vitaphone equipment, stopped the show from 9 P. M. to 10 P. M. and ran short subjects while the broadcasting was amplified by the Vitaphone to all parts of the house. Neighborhood houses installed regular radio sets and got as much out of the program as they could.

The broadcasting of the United Artists Stars over radio Thursday night gave business at the Dallas theatres a hard jolt as did the former program. The managers of the first run houses complained of this practice and the complaint was justified.

It would be undignified to call the experiment a "flop," but the word just about expresses the right meaning, according to reports from Atlanta. Three down-town theatres elected to tie in—Loew's Grand, the Metropolitan and the Rialto. Their decision to hook-up with the broadcast amounted to making the best of a bad situation—they could give their patrons the radio program or they could ignore it and lose the patronage of those fans who wanted to hear it. So they hooked up—and with these results:

At Loew's Grand the audience grew impatient and began stamping the floor in protest. A new demonstration broke out as each new number was announced. That crowd wanted entertainment and the radio program failed to supply it.

Manager W. T. Murray at the Rialto Theatre anticipated that the radio program alone would never hold his audience, so he kept the picture program on the screen continuously. He is confident that his audience would have walked out on him otherwise. It is his belief that the radio program did not sell one extra ticket.

An average-sized audience at the Metropolitan sat through the greater part of the program. But interest was sustained by a rather clever bit of showmanship contrived by Manager Carter Barron, who supplemented the radio program with a trailer composed of excerpts from pictures in

Block Booking Distributors Appear Before Trade Commission

DISTRIBUTORS of motion pictures engaged in block booking are appearing before the board of review of the Federal Trade Commission, in order that the fact of their engaging in this practice may be made a matter of record. It is planned by the commission to bring a general suit against all companies engaged in the practice, if the response to be filed by Paramount this month fails to indicate full compliance with the cease and desist order of last July.

A number of distributors recently signed a petition requesting that the commission temporarily accept the trade practice resolutions to see how they work out, but the fact that the Government is going ahead with its plans for prosecution indicates that the petition was adversely acted upon, although no announcement has been made.

Hit Standard Contract

Pittsburgh Delegates to Trade Practice Conference Say Chicago Meeting Ignored Recommendations

THE Western Pennsylvania exhibitor unit is reported as decidedly opposed to the new contract adopted recently at Chicago, as it is declared the document does not carry out instructions recommended at the Trade Practice Conference. This is the statement made by Anthony Jim and Nathan Friedberg, who represented the Pittsburgh territory at the conference.

In addition to declaring themselves far from satisfied with the contract because it does not carry out the recommended instructions, the delegates point out a number of deficiencies in the action of the Chicago meeting.

They declare the contract committee was to be composed of six members, three producers and distributor members and three non-affiliated exhibitors, with H. M. Richey of Detroit as secretary. In the event of a tie vote the judge of the United States Supreme Court was to appoint the seventh man, whose decision was to be final. They contend there was no need for a seventh man as Gabriel Hess, attorney for the Hays organization, also was admitted to all conferences to act as secretary, without any consideration or recommendation from the Trade Practice Conference.

Jim and Friedberg say the contract was to have been forwarded to the exhibitor delegates who attended the Trade Practice Conference for their approval, recommendations or rejection but that they were completely ignored. They contend further that at a meeting held in Chicago on January 30th a motion was made by Nathan Yamins that the exhibitor delegates were to vote the unit rule on the contract, that this was not carried out and the independent theatre owners were betrayed.

Jointly, Friedberg and Jim say:

"The sentiment as expressed by the members of our organization is that the only hope for an equitable contract and fair trade practice is through some action by the Government. In our judgment the new contract is worse than the contract we are now working under."

Publix-F & R Close Deal

11 Houses Taken Over by Northwest Paramount, New Operating Corporation

ELEVEN big theatres operated by Finkelstein & Ruben in Minneapolis and St. Paul were taken over last week by a new operating corporation, Northwest Paramount, headed by Sam Katz of New York, President of Publix circuit.

The theatres taken over included the State, Strand, Garrick in Minneapolis and the Capitol, Tower, Astor, Strand, Garrick and Princess in St. Paul. The eleventh theatre was the new Minnesota, which was already partly controlled by Publix. The Garrick and the Princess in St. Paul are not open at the present time.

The incorporators of the new company are Sam Katz and F. L. Metzler of New York, also a Publix official; William Hamm of St. Paul and Moses Finkelstein of Minneapolis.

I. H. Ruben, Harold D. Finkelstein and Edmund Ruben, members of the firm of Finkelstein & Ruben, are not included in the articles of incorporation filed with Mike Holm, secretary of state.

Mr. Hamm announced that Northwest Paramount will be merely an operating company and will have a capitalization of $100,000. Actual ownership of the theatres involved is still in the hands of the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate (F. & R.)

One report had it that the deal was made on a 50-50 basis, with Publix officials holding a half interest. It was said that the same arrangement was made for the operation of the new Minnesota theatre, with Publix furnishing the films on a percentage basis, however.

Although Finkelstein & Ruben controls about 140 theatres in the northwest, the deal with Publix affects only the 11 theatres named. Under a contract said to have been signed by F. & R. and Publix, the latter circuit, as a distributing organization for Paramount films, will provide the bulk of the motion picture films shown in the F. & R. theatres.

Shortly after the Publix-F. & R. deal was put through, it was reported that Fox would continue its negotiation for outright purchase of all the Finkelstein & Ruben theatres. The reported consideration was $9,500,000. Completion of this sale would make Fox a partner of Publix in the operation of the new Minnesota theatre, but under the terms of the proposed purchase, Fox would control all the other F. & R. theatres which were included in the Publix deal of last week. The deal would also include the other 140 odd theatres in the northwest.

Opinions Differ on U. A.-Dodge Broadcast

which the contributing stars appeared.

"An awful flop."

Those three words tersely tell the universal opinion of St. Louis on the Dodge Brothers hour.

The reaction locally was anything but favorable for the screen stars and starettes that participated in the big radio affair.

Bolstering up the big screen tie-up the three leading first run houses of St. Louis arranged to Broadcast Dodge Brothers hour, but it is doubtful whether Loew's State or Skouras Brothers Ambassador and Missouri theatres took in a dollar's worth of extra business as a result of the added radio attraction.

The "National Hookup" was received in Salt Lake City with close to perfect reception. Through arrangements with radio station KSL the American Theatre gave the patrons the one hour National Broadcast, it is announced.

May Designated Morris Month for Sales Drive

The month of May will be known to the Warner organization as Sam E. Morris month, it having been named after the Warner general manager of distribution. During this 31-day period the sales force of the organization will demonstrate their zeal for playdates. This will be the third annual Morris month and the organization confidently predicts that it will be the most successful yet.

Universal Scenario Editor Addresses Stage Actresses

Leonard Fields, eastern scenario editor for Universal, spoke to the members of the Twelfth Night Club in their clubhouse in New York last Sunday. His subject was writing for the motion pictures. He outlined the present methods of story research and choice and explained why only one half of one per cent material submitted is useable.

"Uncle Tom" Opened at Criterion in L. A.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin," the Universal special, was presented for the first time on the West Coast when the Criterion Theatre in Los Angeles premiered it last Thursday night. The special opened for an unlimited engagement at $1.50 top. The picture is now in its fifth month at the Central Theatre in New York City. A large crowd of celebrities attended.

Theatre Firm Expands in New England

THE Interstate Theatres Corporation, a new company, has acquired the holdings formerly operated by the Regional Chain Theatres of New England, Inc. These include the Putnam Theatres Corporation, the Milford Realty Corporation, the Stoughton Theatre Corporation, the Washington Operating Company and the Canton Theatre Company. Edward Ansin is president of Interstate and E. Harold Stonemam is treasurer. Maurice Pouzner, formerly head of the old company, has withdrawn from the companies taken over, it is reported.

Putnam Corporation operates the Bradley and Victory at Putnam; the Orpheum in Danielson, Palace and Princess in Rockville, all in Conn. Milford Corp. operates the State in Milford, Mass.; Stoughton Corp. operates the State in Stoughton, Mass.; Washington Co. operates the Colonial in Brockton, Mass.; Canton Co. operates the Orpheum in Canton, Mass.

Publix-Saenger Increases Holdings in Raleigh

Stevenson Theatres, Inc., of Henderson, N. C., have deposed of their interest in the Capitol Theatre in Raleigh to the Publix-Saenger group, thus crystalizing rumors that have been going the rounds in connection with the deal. The negotiations were started some weeks ago when Publix-Saenger acquired the Palace from Aronson and Browne. Control of the town of Raleigh is now in the hands of Publix-Saenger.

W. C. Enloe is in charge of the Capitol, which, with the Superba, will be used for second runs.

Fire Destroys 2 Theatres in Crisfield, Maryland

Flames, sweeping the business district of Crisfield, Md., the night of March 29, destroyed property to the amount of $1,000,000 including two theatres, the Arcadia and another small house. The owner of the Arcadia, George W. Lawson, was responsible for averting a panic when the blaze, in some unexplained way, started in the furnace room under the Arcadia. He seized a fire extinguisher and attempted to subdue the fire while his partner, G. S. Madrix, asked the audience to calmly make their exit.

Independents Have Pledge of Exhibitors—Rogers

Budd Rogers, vice-president of Gotham, who has just returned from a tour of the country lasting two months, is jubilant over the opinions of theatre men on the quality of productions the independents are supplying them with.

Declaring he had sounded out definite sentiment while on his mission on the road, Mr. Rogers is decided that the selection of the type of stories his company will screen is a simple matter. Referring to the exhibitor as a dealer who is acquainted with the type of product he can sell, he states the new stories are the result of an earnest endeavor to supply the needs of exhibitors.

New Stanley Committee

Powerful Finance Body Selected As Further Step Toward Stabilizing Affairs of Company

AT a meeting held in New York, Wednesday, March 28th, a finance committee made up of members of the board of directors was appointed by the Stanley Company of America as a further step toward stabilizing the affairs of the company, which is now under the direction of Irving D. Rossheim, recently named president.

This newly named committee is composed of John A. McCarthy of Philadelphia as chairman, Colonel Louis J. Kolb and Albert L. Smith, all three powers in finance. Mr. McCarthy is executor of the George Earle estate which is heavily interested in the Stanley Company. Colonel Kolb is a prominent Philadelphian of immense wealth, and Albert Smith is of the firm of E. B. Smith and Company, for years bankers and financial sponsors of the Stanley Company.

At the New York meeting President Rossheim reported that the economies put into effect following the reorganization of the board of directors and the executive staff of the company, had had most beneficial effects on the various circuits in the Stanley chain. His enforcement of these economies without effecting the efficiency of the organization were approved and warmly commended by the board of directors.

Various other reports made by heads of departments and theatre groups were also read and approved. In every instance they showed flourishing patronage and excellent receipts.

"These reports were most gratifying," said Mr. Rossheim. "We have been able to institute a number of economies and to stimulate business. Business is good and there is every prospect of an increased prosperity within the year."

The Stanley Company moved its executive offices this week to the Earle Building, 11th and Market Streets, Philadelphia, and now occupies the third and fourth floors, which are divided into thirty-six offices.

Chicago Houses Change

Ambassador Goes Over to Stock and Other Picture Theatres Turn to Burlesque

POOR business in a number of Chicago's motion picture houses is bringabout some radical changes in the motion picture exhibition field, with several theatres switching to stock or burlesque.

On Easter Monday, the Ambassador Theatre will cease to operate as a motion picture house, and will open with a stock company, headed by Harry Minturn, advertising loop shows at one-fourth loop prices. This house was owned by the H. & H. Theatres Corporation, W. P. McCarthy, president, and opened in 1925 as a deluxe moving picture theatre. It has a seating capacity of twenty-five hundred. The H. & H. Theatres Corporation also owns and operates the Drake Theatre, which will continue with a picture policy.

The Pantheon Theatre, not long ago regarded as one of the leading de luxe houses on Chicago's north side, operated by Lubliner & Trinz, is another theatre to feel the pinch caused by the building of big, modern theatres in its vicinity. This house has been leased by a company headed by Louis K. Ansell, operator of the Star & Garter Theatre, a burlesque house on West Madison Street, who will put a similar policy in effect at the Pantheon, including popular midnight shambles every Saturday night at midnight. This is the second motion picture theatre to go into a burlesque policy recently, the new Lawndale Theatre having turned from pictures to burlesque a few weeks ago, since which time it is reported doing a flourishing business.

Balaban and Katz are closing the Convent Garden and the Orpheum Circuit's Tower is switching to picture and musical tabloid. The Diversey is being changed to a four-a-week change house.

Pittsburgh Independent Exhibitors Plan Cooperative Body

A NEW cooperative independent exhibitors organization is in the process of formation in Pittsburgh, with many prominent theatre owners expressing their approval of it and their intention to join. It is likely that it will be properly functioning within the next few days.

By the organization of this co-operative association exhibitors believe they have the most businesslike proposition ever offered them for their own protection. They feel that it will place them in a much stronger position to combat theatre chains.

Just now the plan is in a formulative stage and its details have not yet been revealed. Negotiations have been entered into with one of Pittsburgh's most prominent film men to have him assume complete charge of the new organization. The temporary committee in charge of the organization is composed of M. A. Rosenberg, John Alderdice, Nathan Friedberg, William Wheat, Morris Finkel, Alex Morre and Morris Roth.

European Industry Busy

Commerce Department Reports Speeding Up of Theatre Building and Picture Production

THE popularity of the motion picture film is increasing steadily in Europe, according to Trade Commissioner George R. Canty, in a trade bulletin just issued by the Commerce Department's Motion Picture Section. New theatres of the American type are being built with the most improved equipment and increased seating capacity.

Last year, according to Canty, there were 733 theatres either newly built or reconstructed in Great Britain and Continental countries, having an aggregate seating capacity of nearly 400,000. In the matter of new construction, Germany had a long lead with 280 theatres built, having a seating capacity of 130,000. Great Britain followed with 100 theatres, with seating capacity of 95,000, while France built 68 theatres, with a total seating capacity of 50,000.

These three countries, Trade Commissioner Canty points out, are all producing more and better feature films than ever before. At the same time many of the smaller countries are exerting every effort to establish native motion picture industries. Canty estimates that in 1927 the feature pictures produced in Europe numbered 460, involving an expenditure of approximately $16,000,000. Most of these pictures came from German, British or French studios. Germany produced 241; France followed with 74; while Great Britain turned out 44 feature films during the year. Of the smaller countries, Poland produced 17 features; Austria, 16; Czechoslovakia, 11; Sweden, 10; Denmark, 6; and Italy 5.

The European market, the bulletin reveals, acounts for considerably more than half of the total revenue obtained by American exporters of motion picture films. Last year we sent to this area about 70 million feet of film which was an increase of 7 million over 1926. American features distributed in Great Britain numbered 723, an increase of about 100 over the previous year.

At the same time, however, our relative share of the British market declined slightly. Germany took 192 American films in 1927, a drop of 37 from the 1927 total, while France took 368 as compared with 444 for the previous year. In both Germany and France the ratio of American films to the total number of films exhibited declined in 1927 as compared with 1926.

While the increased production of motion pictures in our chief European markets will unquestionably have a tendency to lower the proportion of American films shown, this decline will be more than offset by the steadily growing number of new theatres being built and the resultant increase in film rentals. In the long run it is probable that the next few years will witness an increase in revenue from our exports of feature films to the European markets.

Big Campaign on Shorts

West Coast Theatres to Use Billboards and Exploitation Contest on Lupino Lane Comedies

WEST COAST THEATRES is planning an extensive advertising and exploitation campaign on short comedies for the first time. It is to be used in connection with Educational's Lupino Lane comedies and will get under way early in April with the first showings of "Fandango," Lane's most recent comedy, in the key cities of the West Coast Circuit. The campaign will be applied to all of the Lane comedies.

This West Coast activity will last sixteen weeks and will have several distinct features. One of these will be a full showing billboard campaign on Lane and his comedy "Fandango." Billboards will be used from Seattle to Los Angeles. They will be posted at least one week before the opening playdates of the comedy and will remain in place for two weeks or longer.

Another feature will be a theatre manager's contest for all West Coast house managers during the sixteen week period. West coast managers have been offered three cash prizes for the best publicity and exploitation campaigns conducted on Lane comedies played during the campaign.

In keeping with the idea of placing Lane and his comedies constantly before the public during the contest, managers of the houses of the circuit have been advised to devote a large part of their advertising space to the short comedy star and his vehicles.

At least two Lupino Lane Comedies will be used in first run situations in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Portland and four comedies in this series will be used during the contest in the other houses of the West Coast Circuit.

Harold Lloyd in N. Y. for "Speedy" Show

HAROLD LLOYD arrived in New York on the Twentieth Century last Tuesday morning from the coast to be present at the premiere of his latest production for Paramount, "Speedy." While in the city he will reside at the Ritz Carlton. He expects to return to the Coast about April 21st.

Burbank Plant Shooting 10, Preparing Several More

Ten feature productions are now in various shooting stages at the First National studios, located at Burbank, where several more features are being placed in shape for the cameras.

George Fitzmaurice will begin filming "The Barker" during the first part of April. Scenarist Adelaide Heilbron is putting the finishes touches on the script of "Once There Was a Princess." Preparations are also progressing on Richard Barthelmess' next film to follow "Roulette," now in work for three weeks.

Productions which are under way are: "Heart to Heart," "The Hawk's Nest," in work for four weeks; "The Butter and Egg Man," "The Divine Lady," "The Whip," "The Code of Scarlet," "The Boss of Little Arcady" and an untitled Harry Langdon comedy, which has been in production for nearly four weeks.

Tiffany-Stahl Studios Now Extremely Active

Five productions are actually in work at the studios of Tiffany-Stahl, where a similar number are now in preparation and three are in the cutting room.

The productions in work are: "Ladies of the Night Club," which George Archainbaud is making; "Stormy Waters," adapted from a story by Jack London, which has been started under the direction of John G. Adolphi. Work has also been started on "Marriage of Tomorrow" and "Green Grass Widows," the directors and casts of which will be announced shortly.

In the final preparatory stages are: "Lingerie," to be directed by George Melford; "Beautiful But Dumb," "The Albany Night Boat" and "The Grain of Dust," the last to be directed by Archainbaud. In the cutting room, being titled and assembled, are: "Power," "Clothes Make the Woman" and "The Scarlet Dove."

Eleven Paramount Films in Production

Twenty-four-hour shifts are now working in the laboratories of Paramount to keep in pace with film developing and printing, Paramount reports concerning its present production drive at the Hollywood plant, where eleven features are in work.

The pictures occupying the ten stages on the Paramount lots are: "High Treason," "The Fifty-Fifty Girl," "The Drag Net," "Warming Up," "The Magnificent Flirt," "Three Sinners," an Adolphe Menjou film (last titled "A Date with a Duchess"), an untitled Esther Ralston vehicle, a titleless Beery-Hatton feature, and "Fools for Luck."

Pinanski Building Theatre in East Boston

A 2,000-seat house, the first in an expansion plan, will be constructed in East Boston, Central Square and Meridian Street, by the New England Theatres Operating Corporation of which Samuel Pinanski is president. The house, it is expected, will be completed and opened by early next fall. The interior will be of the atmospheric type and will represent the courtyard of a Spanish village. Both the interior and the exterior have been designed, to some extent, by Mr. Pinanski, who is supervising the work. The architects are, Krekyn, Brown and Rosenstein.

Jack Lustberg Now With Excellent Pictures

Jack Lustberg, long identified with the distribution in the independent field, has joined Excellent Pictures Corporation in an executive capacity beginning April 1.

Sapiro Will Form Unit for Buffalo Exhibitors

AN exhibitors' cooperative association will be formed in Buffalo or in the Buffalo zone by Aaron Sapiro, who is heading a similar association in New York City.

Sapiro will address the Buffalo exhibitors on April 18 and the Buffalo organization may be affiliated with the one in New York but that has not yet been decided.

Southern Exhibitors Will Discusss Percentage Pacts

At the convention of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas exhibitors to be held in Oklahoma City on April 9th, the chief topic of discussion will be guarantee and percentage contracts, says W. Z. Spearman, president of the Oklahoma unit, who issued the call on orders from the board of directors. Plenty of opposition to the overage system has been given vent to throughout the state, it is said.

Child Law Snags Loom

Banning of All Children Under 16 in Quebec Picture Houses Involves Intricate Questions

THE new law in the Providence of Quebec, prohibiting the admission of all children to moving picture theatres at all times, the age limit being 16, has already gone into effect but it is intimated that it will be some few days before the legislative machinery can be put in motion to carry out the change.

Intricate questions have bobbed up in connection with the enforcement of the law. Although children are allowed to see moving pictures in schools and convents, where they are regular pupils, it has been found that children attending church or Sunday Schools where moving pictures have been presented in the past, are not now privileged to see such pictures at religious or other services under the new law. It has been pointed out that this point is not covered in the new statute because no representations were made by churches or Sunday School authorities for such an exception from the legislation when it was being discussed in the Quebec House. Therefore, the churches are in the same boat with theatres in Quebec.

It has also been pointed out that a boy 14 years of age and a girl 12 years of age may be married in Quebec, while children may leave school to go to work when they become 14 years of age. They cannot see a moving picture show, however, until they are 16 years old.

The bill in the Ontario Legislature at Toronto, providing for special censorship of moving pictures for juvenile audiences and the raising of the age limit from 15 to 16 years for children attending moving picture shows unaccompanied, together with a provision for more official matrons in theatres at the expense of the exhibitors, did not meet with the approval of the Ontario Government.

The Attorney General's Department of the Providence of Quebec will launch action against exhibitors of Montreal and Quebec to make test cases on Sunday shows, thus placing the Sunday show issue before the judicial authorities. For many years, the moving picture theatres of cities and towns have operated on Sundays practically without hindrance.

It is to be determined, according to the announcement, whether the provisions of the federal Lord's Day Act are applicable to the theatres in the Province of Quebec or not.

Cleveland Exhibitors Ask 21 Days Instead of 57 Protection

CLEVELAND motion picture exhibitors are asking for 21 days' protection for first runs instead of 57 days, as they claim is now in force at many of the local theatres. A committee of exhibitors from the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association will present this protection policy to every local distributor as an equitable policy for the coming season.

Exhibitors are asking 21 days' protection from the last play date for the first runs. But they are willing to grant a seven day second run with another seven days' protection, making a picture available to the subsequent run houses on the 36th day after the last play date of the first run. Several exchange managers have stated, it is said, that they believe this is an equitable demand from the point of view of the exhibitors and that they favor it as a releasing policy inasmuch as they can play up their product in a shorter period of time.

Each exchange has been dealt with separately in this protection matter. It cannot be handled by the Film Board of Trade because some of the companies belonging to the Film Board of Trade are not granting 57 days first run protection.

Schine Offering Stock at $37.50 per Share

AN application will be made soon to list the preferred stock of the Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., on the New York Curb market by Bonner and Brooks. The latter company will offer a block of preference stock of this company to the public at $37.50 per share.

The company has outstanding 35,000 shares of preference stock, 40,000 shares of Class A common and 10,000 shares of Class B common. As of December 31, 1927, net tangible assets were $2,217,989. Goodwill and leaseholds are carried at $1. Gross income increased from $1,290,283 in 1925 to $2,173,665 in 1927 and net available for dividends from $90,853 to $301,896.

Atlanta Union Denied Claims for Damages

THE decision of the arbitrators went against the Atlanta Federation of Musicians when the union brought claims for damages in amount of $7,200 against the Metropolitan Theatre in Atlanta, Ga., and decided to let the matter rest with a specially chosen board of arbitration. The decision as handed down by the arbitrators is final and binding, both sides having agreed to abide by the verdict.

The case was heard in the offices of Hooper Alexander, Atlanta attorney, who with Stiles Hopkins, another attorney, and Sidney Hayles, public accountant, served as arbitrators. Paul Donahue was counsel for the musicians' union and Sam Hewlett represented the Metropolitan.

Newspaper Opinions

"American Beauty"—First National, Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati

Commercial Tribune: "Story is a whimsicality, adequately dressed up. Camera must occasionally lie! No woman could be so persistently, immaculately and unreasonably beautiful, all the time, as Billie Dove. Film is photographic opportunity for most perfect photographic subject in Hollywood. It can't go wrong."

Enquirer: "Film certainly lives up to its title, for Billie Dove undoubtedly is one of most beautiful women on screen. Even cameraman with a grudge against her would have hard time getting poor shot of her pulchritudinous physiognomy."

Post: "As long as Billie Dove retains that exact beauty which photographs gorgeously from any angle, we personally shall admire her, no matter what may be the picture content. Her 'American Beauy' is thoroughly normal, decent affair, nicely adjusted with unexpected . . . surprising and beguiling."

Times - Star: "Appropriately named 'American Beauty,' since leading role is played by Billie Dove. Miss Dove so pretty that you don't expect much else of her, but she happens to be better actress than most professional beauties."

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy"—First National, Mainstreet Theatre, Kansas City

Star: "Handed me hearty laugh and it is safe to advise you to see 'Helen of Troy' this week and assure you that you will get your money's worth. Picture brings out satire of Erskine's novel. Has been produced on lavish scale which makes it attractive photographically as well as narratively . . . One of finer pictures."

Times: "One can't understand how Greeks ever lost control of world if they really had girls who look like ones in this picture. Subtitles are as modern as tonight's dinner and probably more appetizing. Entire company gives excellent performance."

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy"—First National, Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, O.

News-Bee: "They say slapstick and art can never mix, but producers have here blasted this theory into proverbial cocked hat. Truly artistic massive sets and beautiful costumes topped off by present-day satire and wit, form basis for picture as original as it is comically human."

Times: "Broad burlesque and boasting some elaborately built sets. good fun. Gorgeously staged film, Ancient kings, queens, princes broadly burlesqued and satirized in light of present-day slang phrases and epigrams."

"The Circus"—United Artists, Shea's Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo

Courier-Express: "Charlie Chaplin!—two magical words that spell pure enjoyment, a name that conjures the best in real comedy entertainment, the Prince of Clowns in the funniest thing he has ever done. Charlie Chaplin is a circus in 'The Circus'—a genius in whom the art of pantomime is reborn, a lovable little man, who catched at the heart of each child and adult with his whimsical funmaking, packing the great Shea's Buffalo Theatre to the rooftop, sending thousands away happy and bringing them back to laugh again and again.

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy"—First National, Fifth Avenue Theatre, Seattle

Post-Intelligencer: "Finds instant favor with all audiences. Erskine brand of polite naughtiness is popular—on screen as well as on printed page. Incomparable Maria Corda moves through it in voluptuous perfection. It's better than book. Brisk and naughty satire . . . with humorous appeal."

Times: "Wins salvos of laughter. One of most beautiful pictures that has ever been shown in Seattle. Has comedy in generous quantities and is sly, satirical, subtle, broad, whimsical and daring by turns. Richly costumed and displays sets breath-taking in their magnitude and striking in their pictorial effect. Hilarious kidding."

"The Shepherd of the Hills"—First National, Mainstreet Theatre, Kansas City

Post: "All rustic beauty and picturesque characters of Ozarks have been brought to screen. Picture stresses beauty of locale and outdoes itself in photographic splendor. Has been given finished production. It is interest-holding from start to finish and was seemingly enjoyed by everybody about me."

"The Valley of Giants" — First National, Indiana Theatre, Indianapolis

News: "Overwhelming beauty. Greatly superior to Sills' other recent pictures. Well done and worth seeing for its scenic beauty if for nothing else."

Star: "Epic of lumber camps. Shows result of careful direction and is splendid example of films of its type. Several thrilling scenes."

Times: "Type of screen play in which Sills gets along easily. Has one of those strong men roles that fit him. Good photography . . . well directed . . . melodramatic in tone."

"Sadie Thompson" — United Artists, Denver Theatre, Denver

Evening News: "Gloria as 'Sadie Thompson' thrills. Tensely dramatic film. Outstanding in the screen world. It takes an actress of emotional depth and understanding to run this gamut of psychic upheavals, but Miss Swanson more than meets the eests. It's her best performance to date. Tremendous crowds flocked to the Denver over the week-end."

Key City Reports

New York City

WE mentioned in this column last week that if current picture offerings in Broadway theatres were strong enough attendance would be good even though the Lenten season was in full blast and enough Manhattanites and others tumbled out of their burrows the past seven days to justify this statement and bring joy to the majority of theatre managers. Particularly impressive among the popular priced houses were the records hung up at the Capitol, Paramount and Roxy, a number of the higher priced films also holding nicely for this season of the year.

Lon Chaney came through with his reputation for having an army of loyal fans by giving the Capitol one its best weeks in some time, enough cash being taken in to entirely justify a hold over of "The Big City" for another week. The Paramount challenged Chaney's pulling strength with Clara Bow in "Red Hair," a picture rated as not up to the "It Girl's" previous pictures, but plenty strong enough to pack the big Publix house for the whole week. On points the bout between Chaney and Bow went to the latter by a shade.

After a long run at Warners' "The Jazz Singer" came into the Roxy for a two weeks' stay and rolled up a corking good week, proving that a lot of folks were waiting for pop prices on the Al Jolson film. The Strand, with "The Noose" for a second week, failed to hold up to the first week's attendance but all in all made a very good showing. The Barthelmess picture came in for a good share of favorable comment.

Last Wednesday the Colony started its new two-a-day policy with the premiere of "We Americans." Comment from local papers and the trade press is good and even with a free night and the usual amount of paper for all first week's in evidence, the film is getting away to a pleasing business in a house which has for a long time failed to show signs of real life. A better than average picture of its type.

Harold Lloyd's new picture "Speedy" will replace "The Gaucho" at the Rivoli after the latter's run of four weeks. Considering the nine weeks run of the Douglas Fairbanks film at the Liberty its showing at the Rivoli must be termed good.

The Rialto is clicking along to pleasing business with "The Legion of the Condemned," not only cashing in on the present interest in aviation films but getting a steady, good trade for the reason that it is an excellent attraction.

Among the two-a-day specials "The Trail of '98" is going along at a smart pace and predictions are that this picture will continue to pile up gratifying gates for some time to come. At the Criterion, old daddy "Wings" still has them waiting in line at the b. o., while Fox's "Four Sons" is also doing consistently good business at the Gaiety. Other Fox films, "Sunrise" and "Mother Machree" are not doing anything to write home about. Warners' theatre, with its new talkie "Tenderloin" (W. B.) turned in another good week. Publicity attending the amputation of several feet of talkie part panned by critics during first showings reacted favorably with the public.

The Cameo has held "Czar Ivan the Terrible" over for a fourth week. .This film apparently has a far wider appeal than believed by several of the boys in this trade and chalked up nice business at this small theatre. The Embassy with "Two Lovers" had a very fair week. The Hippodrome with "Skinners' Big Idea" and K-A vaudeville did a usual profitable week's business. The Central still has "Uncle Tom's Cabin" after a run of over five months but it has started to show signs of buckling. Martin and Osa Johnson's animal picture "Simba" has left the Earl Carroll after a very satisfactory run.

Los Angeles

TWO openings last Wednesday—"Uncle Tom's Cabin" followed "The Patent Leather Kid" at the Criterion and "Ramona" moved in United Artists after "Sadie Thompson" sailed away. Both pictures promise to duplicate the successful records of their predecessors.

"Love and Learn" at the Metropolitan was subsidiary in point of interest to the "Merry Widow," Publix Stage Revue direct from N. Y. The bill went only moderately well.

"Wings" continues in its record-breaking course at the Biltmore beginning its twelfth week. "The Crowd" concluded a very profitable run at the Million Dollar.

"The Noose" held up its end of the entertainment at Loew's State with Fanchon & Marco's "Japa-Knees Idea," the most elaborate and costly of all former presentations, being well received. Box office receipts for the week were satisfactory.

Announcement of the closing within two weeks of "Four Sons" at Carthay Circle has stirred many theatregoers to action. Carli Elinor's Concert Orchestra and Jack Laughlin's 50-artists stage spectacle add to the entertainment. "Street Angel" has been booked to follow "Four Sons" on April 10th.

"The Circus" played to excellent houses during the past week at Grauman's Chinese.

Boston

AGAIN "The Jazz Singer" has been extended in its record-breaking run at the Modern and Beacon Theatres. First it was for a two-weeks' run, then extended to four, then six. Now it will run a full eight weeks at both houses, simultaneously. It is announced that it will positively close at the conclusion of the eighth week. The former record of the two houses was two weeks.

"Feel My Pulse" was the Metropolitan offering, with heavy business for the Lenten season. "11 Guaranty" was the presentation.

Charlie Chaplin's first film in many months, "The Circus," was one of the outstanding successes of the year at its showing at the Loew's State Theatre, with crowds in line every night during the week. It is expected that box office records will be equalled by the film.

"The Gateway of the Moon" proved a big attraction for the Keith-Albee Boston Theatre, and comes near the top of box-office receipt films of the year.

"Mad Hour" was another attraction grossing heavily during the week, shown at the Washington Street Olympia.

Good receipts are reported by the Scollay Square Olympia with "Chicago After Midnight," "Count of Monte Cristo" at the Lancaster, "Sorrell and Son" at the University, "Sporting Goods" at the Fenway, "The Gaucho" at the Exeter, "The Divine Woman" at the Bowdoin, and "The Gaucho" at the Capitol.

St. Louis

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "The Gaucho" did excellent business at Loew's State theatre during the week, when one takes into consideration general conditions. Local critics were unanimous in praising this picture.

At the Ambassador Clara Bow in "Red Hair" was regarded as the best advertising picture that has come to St. Louis in a long time. Elinor sure knows how to work the screen both ways—collect for the showing of the picturization of her books and then force the pictures to advertise such books, and also to work in several shots about Elinor herself. "Red Hair" is the sort to please a certain portion of the population of any metropolitan centre and Clara Bow generally gets her share of such patronage.

Admittedly even with Elinor's special forms of publicity "Red Hair" is one of Clara Bow's best.

"The Crystal Cup" was on the screen at the Missouri theatre and won fresh prestige for Mackaill and Mulhall. It didn't bust any box office records either. Nie in the P. D. elected the attraction to fill a niche in his special field of The Worst Films of the Year. Naturally everyone does not agree with Nie on everything.

"The Desired Woman," the Vitaphone feature at the Grand Central did not hold up to the marks set by "The Jazz Singer" and "In Old San Francisco." The short features held up the bill during the week.

The St. Louis, the Orpheum Circuit house at Grand and Delmar boulevards, enjoyed an average week for the season. The motion picture was "Dressed to Kill" with Edmund Lowe and Mary Astor featured.

Pittsburgh

PRACTICALLY all the theatres felt the lean hand of Lent last week, the only exception being the Penn Theatre which had an unusually strong show. The feature picture was Dolores Del Rio in "Ramona" and it was well exploited with a complete coverage of the town obtained. The stage show was "Hula Blues" and considered by most of the patrons as one of the best units that played the house.

The Cameo Theatre is playing its last week as a first run theatre, the picture being "Love Me and The World Is Mine." This house has been used as an exploitation house by Universal, but with the inroads made by the new de luxe houses in town, is formed into the grind policy with a fifteen cents top, daily change.

The Stanley Theatre, booked George Bancroft in the "Showdown" with the Florentine Singers and "In The Army" as the two presentations but the house did the poorest week since its opening. Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus" was set into the Grand, this being a second run, incidentaly the first second run that played the House but so many people had seen it at the Penn, the gross was disappointing. Loew's Aldine had Jack Holt in "The Warning," Charlie Chaplin in "The Rink" and five vaudeville acts, while the Davis had "Come to My House" with Trixie Friganza heading a six act vaudeville bill but both houses slumped badly. The Olympic played the "Leopard Lady" and the State, Irene Rich in "Powder My Back" and both houses did average business.

Chicago

UNSATISFACTORY business continues to depress Chicago theatre men generally, with only a few of the large de luxe houses doing anything noteworthy. Bad weather conditions, including a blizzard, added to the lenten slump during the past week.

"The Big City," with a local favorite, Lon Chaney, in the stellar role, was featured at the Chicago Theatre, with "The Fast Mail" as the stage attraction, attendance being about normal. The Oriental Theatre had a strong business getter in "Burning Daylight," Paul Ash and his Gang in "Blue Revue" rounding out a bill which, all other things considered, did well. Fair business was the report from United Artists Theatre, where "My Best Girl" is running.

"The Patent Leather Kid" continued its successful run at McVickers, and "Simba," roadshowing at the Woods, also held over to fair business. The other loop hold-over was "Chicago" at the Roosevelt, which also had as the extra attraction, "Forty Thousand Miles with Lindbergh."

"Dressed to Kill" was the screen attraction at both the Marbro and Granada Theatres, Benny Meroff in "Silver Skies" furnishing the stage entertainment at the former, and Charles Kaley in "Wibbly Wobbly" at the latter, Vitaphone also being included on both bills, as well as the extra attraction, "Forty Thousand Miles with Lindbergh." Fair attendance was enjoyed by both of these houses.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" was the feature at the Uptown, where the personal appearance of George Jessel in "Dancing Feet," with Frankie Masters and his band, stimulated business. The Tivoli offered a program including "West Point" and Benny Kreuger and his band, attendance being reported excellent. The Capitol, which had on its program both Movietone and Vitaphone, the Capitol Merrymakers, in addition to "The Mad Hour" as its screen feature, had fair business, and the same was true of the Avalon, which offered "That Certain Thing" on the screen, and Roy Detrich and his band in "Russian Capers," and community singing on the Vitaphone.

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatres broke about even last week, all, with the exception of the Howard, playing "The Patent Leather Kid," having mediocre bills.

Although the Howard did not enjoy an overwhelmingly good business, its box-office ran high and increased during the week, a good sign for the picture's drawing power. A poor vaudeville bill hurt this picture.

Carlos Harrison -- Palace Theater

CINCINNATI, OHIO

Next door Loew's Grand drew fair business with "Bringing Up Father," which was helped out considerably by a good vaudeville bill.

The Capitol suffered a bit showing Madge Bellamy and Johnny Mack Brown in "Soft Living," not the actors fault, however, case of no story.

A similar catastrophe existed at Keith's Georgia, where Billie Dove fell from her peak pushed up by "The Love Mart," in "The Heart of a Follies Girl," which lacked action and plot.

Douglas Fairbanks and Lupe Velez in "The Gaucho" at the Rialto, second run, drew well.

Three action numbers, "Cyclone Cowboy," "Three Miles Up" and "Trick of Hearts," brought the Tudor an average fair week.

Cleveland

THIS last was a big show week in town. Big attractions at most of the downtown houses brought large attendance. Keith's Palace was jammed both afternoons and evenings for every performance with "Shepherd of the Hills" presented with a novel epilogue which attracted wide attention. "The Gaucho" continued to fill the Stillman during its third week, and will play still another week. "The Circus" did a whale of a business during its first-run neighborhood engagement at the Park. It was school vacation week, too, which undoubtedly helped fill the coffers. Clara Bow in "Red Hair" was a big hit with tremendous audiences at the Allen. The picture proved to have big box office value and a steady line was maintained in front of the box office for practically all performances. "Bringing Up Father," broad comedy picture, attracted those who follow the fortunes of Jiggs in the comic strips, but didn't make a hit with the majority of movie goers. Marie Dressler and J. Farrell MacDonald injected enough life into the picture to hold the interest. Business was fair.

Reade's Hippodrome had a gala box-office week with "That Certain Thing," good audience picture of the Cinderella type, as the feature attraction. "Nameless Men," an underworld tale full of intrigue and suspense, had an average total for the week at the Cameo. Keith's East 105th St. did splendidly with "Let 'Er Go, Gallegher," starring Junior Coughlan, as the big show for Easter vacation.

Neighborhood houses didn't do so well. Legitimate theatres offered keen competition with "The Captive," doing its third week at the Little Theatre, "Broadway" filling the Hanna; "The Silver Chord," with Laura Hope Crews, attracting favorable criticism and big attendance at the Ohio; Will Rogers doing a solo at Masonic Hall; and the stock companies all getting their share of the business.

Kansas City

ATTENDANCE at practically all first run houses in Kansas City this week was a duplication of last week—fair and slightly on the upgrade.

At Loew's Midland Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson" drew well all week, which also can be said of the second week's run of "The Patent Leather Kid," despite the fact that it was a return engagement. At the Mainstreet, Milton Sills in "Burning Daylight" drew slightly under the previous week, as did "Nobody's Widow" at the Globe.

"The Patsy" at the Newman just about equaled the previous week's attendance, which was merely fair.

"Square Crooks" at the Pantages drew good all week.

Nothing extraordinary in the way of exploitation or newspaper advertising was ventured by any of the theatres.

Buffalo

COMPETITION was particularly keen during the week of March 26, with Clara Kimball Young and Eugene O'Brien in personal appearances at the Great Lakes and Hippodrome respectively, and both legitimate houses going full blast, the Erlanger playing a return engagement of "King of Kings," and the Shubert-Teck housing "Gay Paree" with "Chic" Sale, and the result was that no house did any record-breaking business.

"Old Ironsides" at Shea's Buffalo, with the Publix stage revue, "Pagoda Land," drew consistently well all week. This was due in no small part to the success of Charlie Taylor, Shea's efficient publicity director, in arranging a three-way tieup, with the Buffalo Evening News, the navy recruiting stations, and the school principals, to whom he sent booklets on the famous frigate, accompanied by a letter from Mayor Schwab endorsing the picture for its educational value and suggesting that all school children see it. Shea's Hippodrome, in addition to Eugene O'Brien in person, had "College," with Buster Keaton, on the screen, and the theatregoers responded satisfactorily to this double-barreled feature.. "King of Kings" at the Erlanger drew large crowds at the evening performances, and the matinee performances also attracted good audiences. "Alias the Deacon" was the Great Lakes screen feature, with Clara Kimball Young in person headlining the vaudevile, and attendance was heavy during the fore part of the week and again toward the end. The Lafayette put on eight acts of vaudeville and "Silk Stockings," with Laura LaPlante on the cinema, but the response by the public could hardly be termed terrific.

Loew's box office force was kept fairly busy by the customers who were lured by an excellent vaudeville bill, headlined by the Bronson-Renee revue, and William Haines on the screen in "The Smart Set."

Dallas

BUSINESS at the Dallas theatres and the weather have both been fair the past week, with no unusually good weekly grosses in evidences.

"Sorrell and Son," with H. B. Warner and Anna Q. Nilsson, did a good business for the week at the Palace. The opening business was under par, but soon built up, and, with the aid of good matinee crowds, turned in a creditable gross for the week.

At the Majestic, "Sharp Shooters," with George O'Brien and Lois Moran, did a fair business for the seven-day run, but was under the Majestic weekly average, which has been very good.

The Melba, showing "Old Ironsides," with Esther Ralston, Wallace Beery, George Bancroft and Charles Farrell, failed to get the big crowds, and the receipts for the week were only fair. "Old Ironsides" was easily the outstanding picture of the week, and had good publicity behind it, but for some reason failed to get the deserved business.

At the Capitol, "Midnight Rose," with Lya De Putti and Kenneth Harlan, checked off an average week. Ford and Glenn, radio entertainers from station WLS, Chicago, and station WFAA, Dallas, appeared in person as an additional feature to the program.

"Motherhood," a maternity problem picture, played to fair business for the week, at The Old Mill. A tie-up with the Dodge Bros.' star radio hour failed to boost business Thursday night. Loudspeakers were installed, and the regular program continued during the broadcasting, with the exception of the music.

At the Arcadia, "The Wizard," with Edmund Lowe, and "The Last Command," with Emil Jannings, brought above average business, although the usual Vitaphone features were absent.

Minneapolis

WITH the exception of the new Minnesota Theatre, which did a grand and glorious business during its opening week, there wasn't much to brag about from a box-office standpoint in Minneapolis last week. Everybody went to the Minnesota, and that meant that the other houses suffered accordingly. This new house, which is jointly controlled by Publix and F. & R., seats 4,050, and is the fifth largest in the United States, and it was filled to capacity most of the week, and all the theatres, including movie, stock and vaudeville, felt the effects of the new competition. The Minnesota had a good program, headed by Richard Dix in "Sporting Goods," and the Publix Stage unit, "Treasure Ships," but the program didn't matter much, as the people came chiefly to see the theatre.

Reporting on the other theatres is merely a matter of saying that they did as well as could be expected in the face of the first-week competition of the Minnesota. The State inaugurated its new policy of showing the bigger pictures with Joan Crawford in "Rose-Marie," while "Chicago" was staying over at the Garrick for a second week.

Corinne Griffith was at the Strand in "The Garden of Eden," and "The Patent Leather Kid" came into the Grand, a second run loop house, for a week. Pantages showed "A Girl in Every Port" and the Hennepin-Orpheum featured May McAvoy and Conrad Nagel in "Slightly Used."

The Lyndale, Loring, Rialto, American and Lagoon — neighborhood houses — were offering such films as "A Man's Past," "The Last Command," "Beau Sabreur" and "The Patent Leather Kid."

Seattle

THE Seattle Theatre, new Publix playhouse, was away again far in the lead during the last week, marking the third week of capacity and near capacity business for the 3,500 seat house. "West Point" was the screen attraction and Publix' "Russian Revels" was the stage show; both met with decided success and pleased big audiences. Jules Buffano's work with the stage band is very well liked here, and a local dance interpolation for the grand concert also pleased. Gross around $20,000 again.

The second of the big houses, the Fifth Avenue Theatre, dropped out of the week's running, having been rented to the Seattle opera patrons for three days in the middle of the week for the appearance of the Chicago Civic Opera Company. The four-day attraction at the Fifth Avenue was "Becky," a fair screen show. The stage show featured Moss and Frye, colored entertainers, who were accorded a fine reception here. Wallace at the Wurlitzer is a decided attraction at this house each week.

Other than the Seattle program, and the third week of the "Gaucho" at the United Artists Theatre, show business was noticeably off. "The Gaucho" continued to play to pleasing houses for the final few days of the run, after a successful opening two weeks. The gross for the entire engagement was considered quite satisfactory.

"That's My Daddy" at the Columbia Theatre was a mediocre film that did not attract very much business. Denny's pictures have been below par lately. A fairly good supporting film program and a good musical offering were partial redeeming factors. Gross just about average.

At the Blue Mouse Theatre, "The Silver Slave" played to average houses. Business here has slackened up a bit, due to increased competition and a slight drop in the tempo of the films and supporting Vitaphone attractions. Matinees are strong, but evening business is lighter. Business for the last week was just average.

"Sinews of Steel" at Joe Danz's Embassy Theatre, with a local stage revue, played to the average pleasing gross, and drew some added business from the Liberty Theatre, the other Danz house closed again for repairs, after a few unsuccessful weeks of operation.

The vaudeville houses both showed a shorter gross than the previous week. The Orpheum, with its new continuous policy, failed to show any appreciable gain in box office results. "Not for Publication" was the film attraction. At Pantages, "Wolf Fangs" on the screen and Francis X. Bushman, Jr., on the stage combined to produce the average box office gross.

The Egyptian Theatre, first suburban house to feature Vitaphone and Movietone, broke all house records with a 10-day run of "Seventh Heaven" second run, and two second-run Vitaphone acts. Other suburban houses are showing a decline in business, due to more houses downtown and lowered downtown prices.

Salt Lake City

THE downtown first-run theatre reports average very good this past week, with some special and exceptionally interesting programs being presented.

The Capitol Theatre, under the management of George E. Carpenter, held up its usually high standard of attendance offering "The Mad Hour," in addition to the Fanchon and Marco stage presentation.

The Paramount Empress Theatre is still doing a big business on the extended run production ,"The Patent Leather Kid." A stage production is also being included in this bill.

"The Divine Woman," featuring Greta Garbo, proved to be a drawing card of exceptional merit at the Pantages, where Pantage's vaudeville is also shown, and where capacity houses were the rule during this week.

Madge Bellamy, in "Soft Living," did an average good business all week at the Victory Theatre, as did "The Leopard Lady" with Jacqueline Logan at the Gem Theatre.

"The Little Snob," at the American Theatre, has done a fair amount of business, it is reported, with May McAvoy featured.

The second run of "The Garden of Allah," with Alice Terry and Ivan Petrovich, packed the house at the Rialto all week, and the third showing of "What Price Glory" played to large audiences at the Mission, neighborhood house, here.

"The King of Kings" played to overflowing houses at the Salt Lake Theatre, here, last week, and is now crowding the Orpheum Theatre, of Ogden, Utah, to capacity, also the Paramount Theatre, of Provo.

Marie Prevost, in "The Girl in the Pullman," and Mary Astor and Gilbert Roland, in "Rose of the Golden West," were shown at the Towers, a suburban house, here, the fore part of last week, with good results.

Harrisburg

BIG crowds attracted to two downtown theatres that advertised in advance special radio facilities for receiving the Dodge Brothers' Hour of Movie Stars on Thursday night, helped to swell the week's total receipts to very generous proportions in those houses. The theatres that featured the stars on the radio were the Victoria and Loew's Regent. Clara Bow in "Red Hair" was the feature of the week's program at the Victoria, and it went big even without the stimulus of the one-night radio added attraction. At the Regent, the feature was Lon Chaney in "The Big City," and this attraction also drew well on its own merits.

The Colonial offered "The Shepherd of the Hills," the film version of Harold Bell Wright's famous story, and the boxoffice results were quite gratifying.

In the last half of the week the film feature of the State's program was "The Gateway to the Moon," starring Dolores Del Rio, and, although the picture was cleverly done in the opinion of the newspaper critics, there were a good many empty seats in the big theatre at some of the performances.

The Broad Street offered a repeat performance of "The Divine Woman," with Greta Garbo, and, like many other pictures that meet with big success on their first-run showing in the central business district houses, this play did fine business in the neighborhood house. The same film was shown also in the Russell for part of the week, and the boxoffice results there were also gratifying.

Tampa

THE Tampa had two sure-fire cards last week, and both pulled very good business. "The Big City" was featured the first half. Lon Chaney is a favorite with Tampa fans, and his pictures always draw well. This one did not do as well as some of his others, however. For the last half "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" was the feature, and it went over fine and was well liked.

The Victory continues to pull 'em with the Vitaphone productions, and enjoyed a very satisfactory week. "Ham and Eggs at the Front" was the feature, with four Vitaphone presentations as added attractions.

The Strand started the week to very good returns with "Love and Learn" as the feature. Buster Keaton followed in his latest, "College," which failed to develop much of a draw, in fact, business was hardly up to the average of the house. "The Whip Woman" was used the last two days, and it drew about average.

The Franklin used "Adventure Mad" and "The Trick of Hearts" for their first runs, and brought back "The Patent Leather Kid" for a second showing. This latter picture went over big on it's first run here at the Tampa, and it brought in better than average returns on its second showing. The other pictures did about average.

Milwaukee

JUST when last week got well started, a blizzard swept over the city and blocked traffic, and, when things cleared up a bit, a second snow storm descended, so all the downtown theatres were hard hit. Business started off fairly well with the introduction of new pictures on Saturday, but the inclement weather soon put a stop to that. The week's receipts at practically all downtown houses were extremely low.

The Wisconsin celebrated its fourth Anniversary with "The Smart Set" and a special stage presentation. Business was fairly good here.

"The Joy Girl," at the Merrill, failed to connect with anything like good business. "Bringing Up Father" had fair attendance at the Strand. "Love Me and the World Is Mine" was the Alhambra's offering. Houses were slim. The Garden made use of the radio on Thursday night and offered the Dodge Hour, which presented the cinema stars via radio. This innovation was enthusiastically received by the audience. The stunt was well advertised and the theatre was filled as a result. The picture offered was "College," which met with fair success throughout the week. "On to Reno" was greatly appreciated by patrons of the Orpheum.

Neighborhood houses, likewise, were accorded poor patronage throughout the week. "The Love Mart" was featured at the Oriental, Garfield, Tower and Uptown with fair success.

"The Girl from Chicago" played to good houses at the Venetian. "South Sea Love" drew fairly well at the Downer.

Des Moines

"THE LEGION OF THE CONDEMNED" is a good picture, and the audiences here liked it very, very much. Business at what might be a slack time was way above average. It played the Des Moines At the Capitol Theatre, "The Shepherd of the Hills" was the feature, and it did not do as well as it was thought formerly that Harold Bell Wright's pictures would do. It did, however, a good average business, although the stage show was not up to the shows given in preceding weeks. At the Strand, "The Girl from Chicago," with Conrad Nagel, did very nicely, while for the last half Esther Ralston, in "Something Always Happens," made a good run.

Albany

THE pep and personality of Clara Bow in "Red Hair" proved sufficient to overcome any Lenten depression at the Mark Strand in Albany, during the past week. Opening to bigger business than did "The Last Command," on Monday of the previous week, "Red Hair" continued to pack the theatre each night throughout the week, although there was a noticeable falling off at the second show on Thursday night, due to the radio hour with several of the motion picture stars on the air. Coupled with "Red Hair" were the usual Vitaphone numbers and the newsreel. At the Mark Ritz, "The Garden of Eden" drew capacity houses throughout the entire week, although, in the opinion of many, the picture was inclined to drag. There were crowds standing, however, each night, and the picture ran second to Gilda Gray in "The Devil Dancer," which was one of the biggest drawing cards, if not the biggest, since the theatre opened two years ago. The bill was well rounded out with an excellent comedy and a newsreel that had not been cut. The Leland, in Albany, found "Sharpshooters" a good bet from the standpoint of the box office. The Clinton Square Theatre, in Albany, used "The Girl from Gay Paree" and "Wolf Fangs" to consistently good business throughout the week. In connection with its vaudeville bill, Proctor's Grand, in Albany, used "The Wreck of the Hesperus" with rather indifferent results. The neighborhood houses in Albany report business as having shown some little pick up during the last week or so.

In the neighboring city of Troy, the Troy Theatre was packed to its doors one night, in connection with a beauty contest staged with "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Aside from that one night, however, the picture did not do any business to brag about, and, judging from the comment, the picture did not create much of an impression. Along with it was one Vitaphone presentation entitled "The Lemon." The latter part of the week was given over to "Baby Mine," and this picture did not score. At the American Theatre, "The Tragedy of Youth" ran the first half of the week, and "The Stronger Will," the last half, each did only ordinary business. The same situation prevailed at the Lincoln, in Troy, insofar as business was concerned, with "Two Flaming Youths" the first half of the week and "Across the Atlantic" the last half.

San Francisco

AT the close of the fifth week at the Embassy Theatre of Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer," an ambitious soul figured out some rather interesting statistics. More than 152,000 persons had paid their way to see and hear the entertainment during that time.

With the addition of Movietone with Benito Mussolini to the program, interest renewed, and hundreds of Italians and Catholics flocked to the theatre to see their favorites. The sixth week this picture also did exceptionally well, and, because of the crowds, was held over for a seventh week.

Weather conditions good the first part of the week, although poor the later part, greatly helped business the first four days at all theatres but one. "Ramona" played to crowds at the St. Francis Theatre its final week, and "The Showdown," together with the Publix Stage Revue, also crowded the Granada Theatre.

"The Noose," together with presentation acts, did well at Loew's Warfield Theatre, but "The Crowd," shown a second week at the California, continued to register disappointment.

The Golden Gate Theatre did very well with "The Leopard Lady" and vaudeville. The same can be said of the Union Square, which featured "Morganson's Finish" and vaudeville acts. "Wild Geese," shown here at higher prices, was praised by all, and the California Federation of Women's Clubs praised it in a letter and boosted it to its members.

Neighborhood theatres, generally, did an unexpectedly good business the latter part of the week. Due, it is thought, to weather conditions. "Home Made," together with four acts, drew many to the Coliseum Theatre, and "London After Midnight," well filled the Alexandria Theatre.

Ottawa

FINAL professional and amateur hockey games competed with the theatres for popular favor in Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of March 26, and the exhibitors apparently did not suffer much because theatre crowds were fair to good.

"Rose-Marie," at the Regent Theatre, was well liked as a picture, but it was quickly seen that the film production was not like the stage show of the same name. As a North country story it was highly acceptable. Good crowds?. Yes.

Rod LaRocque had not been seen locally for a long time and the fans flocked to B. F. Keith's to see him in "Stand and Deliver." It was a film feature well worth remembering.

Picture fans went to the Centre Theatre in the expectation that "Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath" would be a ridiculous farce—or nearly so. They did see a feature with real comedy and came away satisfied. The Centre had a big week at the box office.

Attendance at the Imperial Theatre slumped with "The Tigress," after a jammed week with "The Latest from Paris." Regular Jack Holt fans and many juveniles patronized the Imperial, but the general public did not seem to care.

The Fern Theatre could not accommodate the crowds for "Money to Burn," particularly because the show included the last episode of "On Guard" and the first chapter of "Melting Millions." Fern followers are almost serial-mad. The Columbia Theatre also drew high patronage with the last chapter of "Melting Millions," which was presented with Tim McCoy's "The Law of the Range." The Rex was the scene of excitement and crowds for "The Sunset Derby" and this neighborhood house held about all it could stand.

Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS houses experienced a drop in box-office receipts last week because of the rainy spell and drop in temperature.

Dodge Brothers' victory radio hour made a noticeable cut in attendance March 29. Managers estimated the radio hour and a heavy downpour of rain caused about twenty-five per cent cut in business.

Neighborhood houses appeared more affected than downtown theatres.

"King of Kings" did a good business on return engagement last week at English's.

Double Feature Bills Not Successful in Detroit

Double feature programs are not successful in Detroit, according to Walter Shafer, general manager of the Henry S. Koppin circuit of theatres. Shafer declares that seven of the Koppin houses which have been playing double features will hereafter bill one straight picture and shorter subjects.

"Cohens and Kellys in Atlantic City" Coming

Simultaneous with the bathing beauty contest at Atlantic City, Universal plans to make at the pleasure resort a Cohen and Kelly picture which will be titled "The Cohens and the Kellys in Atlantic City." It is said that Harry Pollard, who made the original Cohen and Kelly picture, will direct.

Peabody Is Succeeding Johns at Missouri

THE Missouri Theatre, the Skouras Brothers' house in St. Louis, which has had Brooke Johns as personality man for some time will shortly have Eddie Peabody as master of ceremonies at its presentations. Next week will be Johns' last at the Missouri; he intends to retire to his farm in Maryland. Peabody is being imported to St. Louis to take over Johns' place.

The Skouras Brothers have now installed personally conducted stage shows in all their important neighborhood houses.

Opinions on Pictures

Doomsday

Sluggish, Hackneyed Drama

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

IT will never be said that Warwick Deeping, author of "Sorrell and Son," repeated that success when he wrote the story for this picture. At its best, "Doomsday" is a lethargic drama with but an occasional flash of what it takes to make a real motion picture. It drones heavily along with the principals doing the best they can with a sluggish vehicle and a mediocre brand of direction. There will never be any laurels pinned on the brow of Rowland Lee for his work on this production, both Florence Vidor and Gary Cooper noticeably doing their parts in a half hearted sort of way. Lawrence Grant's role, an unsympathetic one, probably rings the truest of any. A certain amount of picture hokum, heavy though it may be, may get this film by with those who can sit through a story, the outcome of which is only too obvious from the very beginning.

The hackneyed plot is the one in which a poor girl chooses between a life of luxury with a broken down old roue and one of drudgery on a farm with the man she loves. She takes the former for her mate and the story shapes itself exactly as everyone knows it will. She obtains a Paris divorce and then attempts to regain the affection of the farmer, who lets her live in his home under the most exacting conditions for six months before admitting that he still loves her. Curtain.

Drawing Power: The author's and star's names will draw them in but this reviewer questions the strength of this as an all around, strong attraction. Exploitation Angles: Tie-up with Warwick Deeping's book, "Doomsday"; also as author of "Sorrell and Son." Names of featured players.

THEME: Girl chooses between two admirers, one wealthy and other poor. Takes the former with whom she lives a loveless life until a divorce is secured. Lives on other man's farm for six months probation and he finally marries her. Happy ending.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, 5,665 feet. Released February, 1928. The Cast: Florence Vidor, Gary Cooper, Lawrence Grant. Directed by Rowland Lee. Story by Warwick Deeping.

Stand and Deliver

Romantic and Thrilling Drama

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

ROD La ROCQUE is an Englishman who finds life too tame in a fashionable London Club in this romantic and thrilling drama, and, having been a leading Ace among the flyers during war times, he looks for new worlds to conquer. There are sequences in the picture that are marvelously done, and the photography is splendid, but the star would be much more convincing if he did not display quite so much egotism.

In the heat of battle it is not difficult to understand indifference in the face of extreme danger, but La Rocque's portrayal of this role makes it quite evident that it is all being done for the camera, and that really the thrilling experiences he goes through are of little consequence. It is too apparently acting, as might also be said of the playing of Lupe Velez, whose chief expression of emotion is a violent heaving of the chest.

As a picture, however, this one appears to be almost sure fire. It has romance, suspense and thrills a-plenty, and it is bound to hold the attention of any audience. Those scenes in which the bandit gangs are hoisted to the high peak of a mountain in a basket with cable attachment are really thrilling, as is the action throughout the story in which the hero, tiring of his club life, joins up with the Grecian cavalry service just for the purpose of running down a notorious bandit. Donald Crisp, who directed, has done a fair job, but did not add any to the effectiveness of the picture by the continuous use of closeups. The work of Warner Oland, as the bandit chief, is a decided feature of the picture.

Drawing Power: Should prove a good draw in houses of all classes. Exploitation Angles: The daring exploits of the hero, and the star's name will offer many exploitation angles. You can promise plenty of thrills and of a novel character.

THEME: Noted war ace, tiring of club life in London, joins the army of Greece solely for the thrill of capturing a notorious bandit. He first thwarts the bandit chief and saves the beautiful Greek girl and later effects the bandit's capture and falls in love with the girl.

Produced by Cecil B. De Mille Studios. Distributed by Pathe. Released, Feb. 19, 1928. Length, 5,423 feet. The Cast: Rod La Rocque, Lupe Velez, Warner Oland, Louis Natheaux, James Dime, A. We Americans

A Sure-Fire Americanization Drama

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

A COMBINATION of an Americanization and a war picture is this sure-fire Universal production, with just enough of the war stuff to carry off the full import of the story, adapted from the successful stage play by Herbert Gropper and Max Siegel. It is by no means a war story, as there is but one sequence showing action on the battlefield. It is described as a drama of American immigrants.

There is much about the screen play that is not entirely new and there is a bit of hokum here and there emphasized for tear drawing purposes, but all in all it looks like a picture that can hardly miss. It has a great abundance of natural pathos and it develops some situations that are markedly dramatic.

It is a somewhat spotty picture with a number of rapid transitions that sometimes leave one wondering just what is coming next, but withal, it holds the interest almost continually, despite the fact that Director Edward Sloman is a trifle slow here and there in laying his situations. This makes the action drag in places, but nevertheless when the various climaxes come they are most effective.

The characters, particularly those of the immigrants, are exceptionally well played and could hardly be improved upon. The portrayals of George Sidney and Beryl Mercer, as Mr. and Mrs. Levine, the old Jewish couple, are real masterpieces. Patsy Ruth Miller, as their daughter also carries off her share of the laurels, as does Albert Gran in the German role of Mr. Schmidt.

Drawing Power: Should prove an excellent attraction at houses of all descriptions. Exploitation Angles: The Americanization angles provide for various hookups that should stimulate business; the all-star cast.

THEME: Young American lieutenant of leading family falls in love with daughter of Jewish immigrants. His life is saved in action by the girl's brother, who sacrifices his own life to do so. The lieutenant returns to claim his bride only to meet objections from his parents, who are made to realize their folly upon meeting the girl's parents, and having explained to them their great sacrifice.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Released, May 6, 1928. Length, 9,151 feet. The Cast: George Sidney, Beryl Mercer, Patsy Ruth Miller, George Lewis, Albert Gran, Daisy Belmore, Michael Visaroff, Rosita Marstini, Eddie Phillips, Andy De Vine, John Boles, Flora Bramley, Jake Bleifer, Kathleen Williams, Edward Martindel, Josephine Dunn. Director, Edward Sloman. Adaptor-Scenarist, Al Cohn. Production supervisor, Carl Laemmle, Jr.

"Edison, Marconi & Co."

(Roach-M-G-M—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

AS the title of this picture indicates, the gang is revealed as a band of inventors, of which Jay is the leader. Young "Wheezer" is his assistant, and between them they contrive an automobile of unusual construction, built along the lines of a submarine. It is easy to imagine some of the trick devices that are applied in making the machine function.

There are eight port-holes in this car which has ample room for the "gang," and it is self-locking. When they are all within "Wheezer" takes the occasion to step on it, and there starts one of the wildest rides ever successfully negotiated. "Wheezer" proves himself a wizard at driving, and the car plunges through all sorts of traffic, while the "gang," with heads through port-holes wonder just when the crash is coming.

On plunges the car through hair-raising episodes until a motor-cop jumps on the running board and brings it to a temporary halt. As he is writing out a ticket "Wheezer" steps on it again, and makes his getaway. There are some extremely funny incidents and situations which should keep almost any audience in an uproar throughout. It is among the best of the "Our Gang" comedies.

"Code of the Mounted"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

ONCE in a while there is a story a little out of the ordinary in this series of western featurettes This is one of the type and it makes an interesting two-reeler, with Jack Perrin featured. Jack, of course, is of the mounted police, and is in love with the daughter of the Post Commander.

It so happens that Helen, the daughter, is enamoured of one Silk Smith, who pretends to be in love with her, but in reality is a border fur robber. Jack runs down Pierre, one of Smith's men, and gets from him evidence incriminating Smith. Knowing of Helen's love for Smith, Jack decides to give him a chance, and tells him if he will go straight he will free him. Smith agrees to show the mountie the hiding place of the furs, but on the way there knocks Jack out and makes his getaway.

Recovering consciousness, Jack rides to Helen's house and arrives there just in time to rescue her from being kidnapped. A fierce fight ensues in which Smith is subdued, and then Helen realizes it is Jack she loves.

"One Every Minute"

(Universal—One Reel)

THESE so-called Snappy Comedies, in which Arthur Lake is starred, are really becoming what the name implies. The stories of the past few have shown a marked improvement over those previously released, and this one is particularly good. Arthur's girl, Mary Marsh, is to have a birthday, so he draws all his money out of the bank to give her a real present.

Arthur's young sister, in telling this news to a friend, is overhear by a crook who works a ruse on him and gets all of his money. The crook pretends to have lost a valuable bracelet and offers Arthur $100 reward if he returns it. A fellow crook drops a Woolworth bracelet at Arthur's feet and Arthur offers to buy it for $20. He then tried to find the man who offered the $100 reward, but fails. He takes the bracelet to the girl, who with Arthur's rival had previously seen it displayed in a Woolworth window for fifteen cents. The rival laughs, and Arthur is humiliated. He decides to remain behind at the girl's house while the others go to a roadhouse. The crook enters to steal the presents and Arthur completely subdues him as the party returns and he is proclaimed a real hero.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Rival Romeos"

(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

OSWALD and his rival have some lively skirmishes to reach the abode of the fair damsel. Oswald is in his flivver and the rival in a high powered limousine, but the former gets the better of the argument when they reach a wide mud puddle, for Oswald's flivver is equipped with stilts.

Arrived at his loved one's house, Oswald serenades her and she descends just as the rival drives up. As the two are engaged in lovely combat a third suitor drives up in a motorcycle with bathtub attachment and flees with the fair maiden. The various characters are put through a series of evolutions that should provoke considerable mirth.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Bright Lights"

(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

OSWALD proves himself a flivver as a gate crasher in this Walt Disney cartoon, which is fashioned about the Cat Town Follies under the big tent. He gets a peep through the tent at the follies girls doing their stuff and, being financially embarrassed, decides to crash the gate.

The gate keeper is a pretty foxy boy himself and repeatedly kicks Oswald out. The latter, however, persists and manages to get in under the Raccoon coat of a cash customer. He is again observed and forcibly ejected, but not until the entire tent show is demolished. There are a few humorous situations, but too much repetition to make this as funny as some of the others of the series.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"A Big Bluff"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THE McGinis family, as usual, manage to get mixed up in a series of complications and brawls in this rather humorous picture of the Keeping Up With the Joneses series. It is of the usual catch-as-catch-can variety of comedy, with situations and slapstick piling up with great rapidity throughout.

Ma McGinis, determined to break into society, invited the Joneses to meet the Count De Bate, whom the detective at the last moment reveals as a crook. In the absence of a Count, Pa McGinis persuades the detective to assume the role, which he does reluctantly. A series of mishaps result with the house in a turmoil. The girl friend of the detective spies him through a window, and joining the melee shows the detective up in his true character as a general free-for-all is precipitated.

This two-reeler is an improvement upon the general run of the series. It has more of a story than usual, and is better constructed with the situations better developed than in most of them. It should be good for many laughs in the neighborhood houses.

"The Battling Duet"

(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

OLD ALFALFA finds himself overmatched in this cartoon of the prizering, though he only agreed to serve in the capacity of referee. The battle is a championship affair between Kid Rufus and Battling Tiny Oswald. After the scene is all set the gong sends the principals off and they settle in the center of the ring to a game of checkers. Old Al attempts to break them and one of the fighters turns on him for a real lively encounter in which Al is bettered.

There are a number of humorous incidents in the training camps of the fighters, as well as while the big bout is on, but it is somewhat lacking in the comedy which sometimes characterizes these cartoons.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Clothes and the Game"

(Sportlight-Pathe—One Reel)

GRANTLAND RICE has another interesting Sportlight in which he compares the sport apparel of the smartly-dressed of today with those of twenty years ago. There is quite some difference in the free and easy action permitted by the modern garments when shown alongside of the ankle length skirts that were worn on the golf links and tennis courts of two decades ago, and the cumbersome bathing suits of the old days as compared with the new. All in all the contrasts are entertaining and at the same time the modish young girl of today presents a series of very pretty pictures on the screen. It is a picture that should go well in the better class houses.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Africa Before Dark"

(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

OSWALD has some real thrilling adventures in this African jungle cartoon vehicle, out of which Cartoonist Walt Disney got a lot of humor. Oswald fares forth on his trained elephant and extracts laughs even from the birds and beasts. A baby tiger even humiliates him by shooting him with his own gun.

But Oswald is not to be scared out by a baby tiger, so he chases him into a hollow log, when, to his horror, three ferocious lions come bounding out. A terrific chase ensues, but Oswald makes his escape on his faithful elephant—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"The Finishing Touch"

(Roach-M-G-M—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

STAN LAUREL and Oliver Hardy are a couple of dumb contractors in this very funny Roach two-reeler, which also has in its cast Dorothy Coburn and Ed Kennedy. It is chock full of funny situations and gags, and is good for a laugh a minute. Some of it, of course, is very silly, but so much of it is good that an audience will laugh at even the silliest incidents.

The builder of a residence in a fashionable suburb is halted through labor difficulties, so he hires Stan and Babe to finish the job at a specified time, and thus win a large bonus. They proceed diligently with their work until a protest comes from Dorothy, who conducts a sanitorium across the way and whose patients are leaving her because of the noise.

At last the house is completed at the time specified, but a bird lighting on the chimney crumbles it just as the owner arrives for inspection, and the boys are prepared to collect their bonus. Piece by piece the house starts to fall apart as the constructors start a battle with the owner.

"Blazing Away"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

LLOYD HAMILTON has not had so good a laugh-maker as this one in many a moon. But when he comes across with something funny he does so with a vengeance. Well patterned with an eye for eliciting guffaws, this vehicle for Hamilton is excellent for your programs. It will make them laugh real hard, not once, but many times. They did not stint on the gags when they produced this one.

Ham is a taxi driver who is captaining a football team against rival taxicab drivers led by Kewpie Morgan. They stage a football game, a game that's filled with effective laugh material. There is no letdown in the comedy which keeps hurtling over continuously. What happens to Ham's taxi will also produce some laughs. A very good short subject, and one which will be a bright spot on any program.

Pretty Lucille Hutton is the girl for whose favor Ham does his humorous best to win the game. Others in the support are Al Thompson and Jack Miller. Norman Taurog directed very well.

"Barnyard Lodge No. 1"

(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

THIS is perhaps the best that has been seen in this series for a long time. It is so full of laughs that it is almost a continuous laugh, with the big climax coming when Al Falfa, in the course of his initiation, is attached to the home plate with a stout rubber cord and used as a baseball.

Al is put through a number of unusual stunts during the initiation and all of them are funny. Finally knocked goofy, he is seen riding the sky astride Pegasus with a beauteous maiden beside him. When he recovers his senses his disappointment is so keen he knocks himself out with a hammer and resumes his pleasant ride—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Oozie of the Mounted

(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

OSWALD, with a mechanical horse, is the mountie in this good cartoon, and he is on the trail of Foxy Wolf, the villain, equipped with a sled and a fast team of huskies. There are some very humorous drawings as the chase continues until Oswald overtakes his man and is knocked cold with his own gun by the bandit.

The mountie is not to be denied, however, and regaining consciousness again takes up the trail. Once more he overtakes Foxy Wolf when a huge grizzly bear comes upon the scene. The bear pursues them both, but Oswald outsmarts them by leading the chase right into the hoosegow and making his own escape through the window.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Buffalo

THE truth of the ancient wheeze about in the spring a young man's fancy, etc., can readily be verified at the Paramount-Famous-Lasky exchange in Buffalo. THE Kansas State Censor Board sat reviewing films Monday in the usual manner. Suddenly a blaze broke from the projection room. One-half reel of a picture was destroyed and Charles O. Smith, operator, was burned about the hands and arms, his quick work in breaking the film saving a greater loss. Dense smoke filled the room and forced the board to discontinue its work several hours. Theatre men, inclined to mix a bit of irony with the incident, are suggesting that it must have been a "hot" film.

A Kansas City newspaper reporter, looking about for something unusual, discovered the other day that the auditorium of the old Auditorium theatre, Kansas City, which had its formal opening in 1887 and which has been everything since that time from movies to "heavy" drama, was now being used as a stage manufacturing equipment plant.

Tom Reed, of Duquoin, Ill., has returned from the New Orleans races. He had a pleasant time in the Crescent City.

St. Louis film men and exhibitors of the territory who remember Lou Hess, one-time manager here for Universal Pictures, as a good salesman and an admittedly "square-shooter," will admit that he was never better at talking in a convincing away than during a recent evening in Cleveland, O., when he unwittingly strolled into a district of the Forest City that does not rate so high as a residential section.

Walking away from the bright lights of the first-run section, Hess suddenly realized that he was in a territory that reminded him of Cicero, Ill. Experience and instinct told him that precaution was a necessary adjunct at that particular moment, so he began to hide his jewelry and other valuables. Soon he noticed a big hooligan dogging his footsteps and at a particularly dark spot the chap was alongside.

"What's the time bo?" asked the other.

Hess, believing that the zero moment was at hand, began to do his stuff.

Quickly he explained that he didn't have a watch; that he was a poor clerk out of a job, who had lost his former position after spending all surplus funds for clothes to make a good showing, and that a sick wife and a large family were at home waiting for him to bring in the bacon or whatever it is that household heads are supposed to bring home besides buns.

And, as we said before, Hess has always been a good salesman. He was never better.

Reaching into his pocket the hooligan pulled out a dollar bill.

"Here, buddy, take this, you need it more than I do," and turning he walked quickly away in search of more profitable fields.

Hess lost no time in getting out of that district. The law of averages were against a second successful sales of that particular kind that particular night. At least that's the way we heard the story of the Film Salesman and the Bandit in Cleveland.

"Sadie Thompson" — United Artists, United Artists Theatre, Los Angeles

Times: "One of finest, most glowingly human pictures screen has ever seen."

Examiner: "Sadie easily most momentous film occasion in Gloria Swanson's life. Has not given such a performance in years."

Express: "A happy choice for Miss Swanson."

Record: "One of best pictures ever filmed and the Sadie Thompson she has created for screen will live long."

Herald: "Fine picture, best in fact that Gloria has made in years."

"Sadie Thompson" — United Artists, Salt Lake City

Telegram: "'Sadie Thompson' Brilliant Success at the Paramount. Powerful character study. Gloria's characterization possesses a magnificent vitality and abandon rarely seen in the films and it brings her once more into the favor of picture fans. There is not a false note in the entire production. It is amazing. The picture is an unusual triumph of sincerity over the usual maudlin sentimentalizing."

"Sadie Thompson" — United Artists, Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia

Eve. Bulletin: "The best bit of acting she has ever done. For Miss Swanson, nothing but praise can be registered. Hers is a vibrant, vivid, compelling characterization, reflective of many moods, marked by a complete subordination of self to the business of portraying a role that runs the gamut of emotion."

Inquirer: "'Sadie Thompson' Excels at Stanley. Gloria Swanson Does Sincere and Gripping Work. Picture is Truly Notable Achievement. Has contributed one of the most sincere and beautiful pieces of acting to motion picture archives. The picture proves to be one of those ideal things which happen with such infrequency that one holds one's breath during its entire length in the fear that it is really too perfect a thing to continue unflawed. Held the audience. One more bit of not too gaudy praise may be given Miss Swanson. She does work that, for sincerity and real feeling has not been surpassed by any other screen actress."

Public Ledger: "'Sadie Thompson' is as satisfying a job as has come out of Hollywood in many months."

"A mighty fine piece of work. It is, for one, the best bit of acting that Gloria Swanson has yet done. It is a real being she creates."

"A Texas Steer"—First National, Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles

Express: "Refreshingly different. One of most delectable hours afforded by cinema. Directed with keen sense of amusing possibilities, played by exceptional cast. Now sly, now salty in its humor which at times rises to hilarious heights."

Examiner: "Those who like Will Rogers cannot help approving of 'A Texas Steer,' and who is there among us who do not cast our vote for him? Whimsical humor, for which he is famous."

News: "Will Rogers a great congressman. He gets vote from this reviewer any time he wants to run for re-election. One of finest screen comedians seen in these parts in many a moon. Real picture."

Read this clipping from his April 7th issue . . . .

Carl Laemmle, Jr., Al Cohn [illegible] note th[illegible] 10.

"Note: In my answer to Mr. Carl Laemmle, President of Universal Pictures Corporation, which was printed in the issue of March 24, I said that if "We Americans" proved to be a good box office attraction I would recommend to those who have bought it to extend the playing time if I should find it a good picture. In my opinion, it deserves extending the playing time. I believe that you could make more money by playing it the extra time than you would if you should play an ordinary picture. Those who have bought it for one day can safely play it two; those who have bought it for two days can safely play three or even four; those who have bought it for three days can play it four, and even five if circumstances warrant it.

With GEORGE SIDNEY, Patsy Ruth Miller, George Lewis, Beryl Mercer, Eddie Phillips, Albert Gran, John Boles, Josephine Dunn, Kathlyn Williams. From the stage play by Milton Herbert Gropper and Max Siegel. Supervised by Carl Laemmle, Jr. Screen adaptation by Al Cohn. An EDWARD SLOMAN Production.

Dolores Costello in 'Tenderloin' with Conrad Nagel

Filled with slam-bang climaxes that remind you of perpetual motion; the rat-tat-tat of pistols, as crooks and police trail after the same girl.

The New York critics marked it A Number 1 when it opened on Broadway.

'The Lion and the Mouse' with May McAvoy and Lionel Barrymore

Wherever a theatrical company has passed, there "The Lion and the Mouse" is a household word. Does this guarantee a full-house run when you book the picture?

There's only one answer. Year in and year out this drama of political intrigue and corruption has played to packed houses.

Dolores Costello in 'Glorious Betsy' with Conrad Nagel

If ever a picture was made for the greater glory of the box-office here it is. High intrigue in the dazzling Versailles court life checkered with the familiar democratic ways of Baltimore a century back. Hypocrisy at war with simplicity. Dolores Costello in "Glorious Betsy" glorifies the box-office.

Al Jolson in 'The Jazz Singer' with May McAvoy

After you have played the supreme triumph of screen art you will understand the why of its phenomenal 25-week run on Broadway and of its 52 weeks of actual playing time, crowded into a period of fifteen weeks, in Philadelphia.

THE SHORT FEATURE

Incorporated in this department of Exhibitors Herald is the Moving Picture World department, "Little Pictures with the Big Punch," which has presented news, reviews and exploitation on short features and serials.

Cash in on the Short Feature As Golden Key to Summer Trade

Now is the time for the alert theatre owner to begin to cash in on the particularly high value of the Short Feature as an attraction for summer patronage. In the Far West and the South that opportunity already has been knocking at the ticket window; in the middle and northern tier of states the warm days and warm nights are at hand.

Want Light Programs in Summer

The exhibitor who studies his patronage and its habits knows that during the summer months Mr. and Mrs. Public and the young Publics want their entertainment in light doses—not light amounts (the opposite is true) but light in theme. And that is the cue for the entry of the Short Feature.

Is summer patronage still a problem? Yes, and no. It still is the problem of the exhibitor who makes no effort to outbid the open road and its lure for motorists. It still is the problem of the exhibitor who makes no effort to provide a theatre as comfortable as the out-of-doors.

Chases Slump Bugaboo

Summer patronage is not a problem for the exhibitor who installs modern ventilating and cooling equipment. Circuit managers long have realized that fact and more and more smaller exhibitors also have profited by that knowledge and the summer slump bugaboo is no longer feared by the theatre owner who fashions his program according to the demands of the season.

The socalled legitimate stage changes its programs decidedly when summer arrives. The light, happy type of play then comes into its own.

Why should not the same be true in the motion picture theatre to the extent of making more attractive the program in which the Short Feature holds an increasingly important role?

There is the short comedy, made-to-order for summer patronage. Summer is a time of gaiety, of laughter. Happiness and cheerfulness is as much a true index of summer as the calendar designation of June 21st. And two reels of laughter is just right to leave the patron happy and without physical exhaustion.

There is the scenic, the picture of beauty with restfulness. What better can an exhibitor do than to bring the country into the theatre?

Comedy for Summer

The answer is: Many will be glad to forsake the roaring, sweating highway, for the ease and good cheer of the theatre—if the exhibitor books product for the purpose, and acquaints them of the fact. Give them comedies for laughs, scenics for visual comfort and delight, the newsreel for action.

There is no summer slump unless the exhibitor himself slumps, neglects to keep abreast of the season, to give the patron what he wants.

This department will welcome comment from exhibitors on how they have used the Short Feature as encouragement for summer patronage.—E. A. R.

What About the Public?

Apathy in the Trade Reflected At Box-office

By William A. Johnston

A GOOD many people are asking us and thousands more are asking each other; just what is wrong with the movies?

We, of the trade, know that many things are wrong within; many things are out of gear in the industrial machine.

But perhaps we are looking too closely within—at the machine itself, and too little without—at the public.

The business at the box office used to be better when the industrial machine was much worse than it is today.

So, perhaps, the trouble—lies with the movie and the public.

What is it?

The public is apathetic. Every exhibitor knows it.

That state of mind may be due to several important facts.

But I believe one reason is enough, and that is that the trade itself is apathetic.

If there's apathy in New York, there will be apathy in the exchanges, and from the exchanges to the salesmen and from the salesmen to the exhibitor—and from the exhibitor to the public.

Are we really selling pictures to the public?

We are not.

And that being true, how can we expect the public to buy?

The super-salesman will probably exclaim that he is selling pictures; and the more super he is the more he will exclaim.

But sales that end with the exhibitor are not sales. A picture is not sold till it's sold to the public.

What we want to know is: how are pictures being sold to the public?

Let's see what some exhibitors have to say about it. Here's some straight talk from Allen Johnson, manager of the Royal and Leonard in Grand Rapids, with which are associated the Family, Wealthy, Michigan and Biltmore theatres:

"What you say in your letter of the 10th interests me greatly, not that I am particularly anxious for the producer to add to his already too-high cost of production and distribution by carrying additional trade magazine advertising space, but because I believe that a great deal of constructive help can be rendered the exhibitor by the producer of a picture in the manner your editorials have outlined.

"It is human nature, or perhaps I should say the nature of exhibitors, generally speaking, to believe that they can be benefited very little from sources outside their own original ideas in 'putting over' a picture. In spite of the foregoing there is no question but that the average exhibitor will admit that he could exploit a picture a great deal better after he has run it than before, for the simple reason that during the run he has had an opportunity to study the subject from all angles, and many exploitation stunts, original to that exhibitor, are wasted because the 'water has already gone over the mill.' If you could convince the producer that it would be good business sense for him to spend the time and money necessary to at least acquaint the exhibitor with the salient high-lights and suggest exploitation angles, in a systematic manner, there is no question but that the expense would be justified, as it would result in more revenue to the exhibitor who made use of the information, and to say the least, fewer complaints against producers because of high film rental.

"It is decidedly platitudinous to say that many a worthwhile picture attraction has met with poor success at the box office, whereas had the exhibitor had advance knowledge of the subject in hand, he would have been able to sell it successfully to his community. The writer is frank to admit that this has happened in his own experience and I believe that it will be the admission of every other honest showman.

"Before now you have undoubtedly heard the pro-

An Acknowledgment

SO many kind messages of condolence have been received by Motion Picture News since the untimely passing of J. S. Dickerson, that it has not yet been possible to acknowledge each expression individually.

We take this means of acknowledging the many kind expressions of sympathy received by us.

Sound Common Sense

IN the T. N. T.-A. M. P. A. Bulletin we find a vigorous article by Bruce Gallup, President of the A. M. P. A., entitled "Wake Up, Motion Picture Industry, Get Hep to the Real Value of Advertising and Publicizing of Motion Pictures."

Mr. Gallup's remarks are straight to the point, and reflect sound, common sense. The problem he discusses is of industry-wide importance. We quote from his article:

"For some reason, the basis of which I cannot understand, perhaps it's just plain ignorance, the work of publicity and advertising in this business, in spite of all the years of experience we have had, is still considered as a sort of odd man's job. People seem to think that all one needs to be successful in these lines is to have a gatling-gun wise-cracking brain and plenty of gall. If that were all that were required, this industry would have been in the soup long ago.

"It seems that the majority has not as yet come to realize that each is a serious profession by itself. That to become a good advertising man one must have spent time on the firing line of selling, must understand merchandising as thoroughly as any sales manager and then must go through the training of knowing how to put the experiences of his actual sales work into type on a printed page in such language that it will sell his product.

"That these two lines of work [advertising and publicity] are a profession as that of a camera man, civil engineer, bridge builder or an artist has never really been seriously considered.

"Yet when hard times come the first thing is to cut down on publicity or advertising expenses, which includes also those who create it and when prosperous times come, it usually is the last thing to receive serious attention.

"Ye gods!—There is no department in any organization in the business today that is any more important than where the printed merchandising ideas are created.

"How would you dispose of your pictures if you didn't advertise or publicize them? Where would your distribution costs go if you didn't use advertising and publicity to break the ice for the salesmen?

"No man in any organization has a position which is any more vital to the successful progress of that organization than the man who sits at the head of the Publicity and Advertising department.

"The value you obtain from him and his assistants depends, however, entirely upon his freedom and upon the degree to which you let him into your problems. Remember the merchandising of pictures is no different than the selling of a piece of soap. You manufacture something to sell to someone who retails it to the ultimate consumer. That product CANNOT be sold, especially against stiff competition, unless you advertise it. And you DO NOT get the most out of that advertising unless you permit the expert in that line to function properly by providing for him absolute coordination between his department, production and sales.

"The A. M. P. A. is composed of men most of whom have become experts in publicity and advertising; some are still in the training stage and the others are the artists who play a most important part in seeing that the ideas, when they reach the printed page, are properly displayed."

What About the Public?

ducer's argument, in answer to your theory, that press sheets are supplied to exhibitors on each attraction and therefore the avenue of information you suggest is a needless additional expense. I would agree with them if no more valuable information was furnished through your pages than is supplied in the ordinary press sheets in common use. Contrary to the present practice, the best exploitation experts possible to obtain should be detailed to this most important work of furnishing new and novel information regarding each production.

"Wishing you success in your efforts to sell the producer on this idea, I am,

"Sincerely yours,
"ALLEN JOHNSON."

1,379 New Theatres in a Year

Survey Shows 2,263 Houses Disappeared from March 1927 to March 1928; Net Loss Over Period Is 884

A SURVEY recently completed by Motion Picture News, covering the vital statistics of the exhibition field from March 1, 1927 to March 1, 1928, shows that 1,379 new theatres were built in the whole country, while 2,263 have gone out of business for various reasons.

Thus the net loss in picture houses for the period named was 884. Of the 2,263, as shown by states in the table below, 2,095 were permanently closed or dismantled; 83 were totally destroyed by fire; and 85 are now used for other forms of entertainment.

In still another classification there are 565 theatres which changed their names or were replaced, and these are, of course, still active. The total number of actual motion picture theatres in the United States on March 1 of this year was 14,235.

The survey revealed that the building of modern houses to replace out-of-date and old-fashioned theatres is going steadily forward, and in some instances is keeping pace with closings.

As hitherto pointed out, the theatre field is undergoing an evolution in the direction of progress, and the net loss of 884 is by no means an unhealthy condition. On the contrary, this disappearing group is composed almost entirely of the "shooting-gallery" type, which have passed their era of usefulness and are therefore giving place to the modern theatre either in the same town or in the nearby natural trading center. The great increase in good roads and the use of the automobile is a decisive factor in the change that is going on.

Ohio showed the greatest number of new theatres—128; followed closely by New York with 123 and Pennsylvania with 112. In fact, the most populous states show the biggest activity in theatre building, and this is, of course, a natural development and one that is likely to become more and more marked in the future.

A study of the table shows that Iowa lost 133 theatres from all causes while 44 new houses were opened. On the other hand, California built 90 new ones, which almost kept pace with the losses, which were 97.

New York, the largest state in population, lost 146 theatres, while, as previously stated, 123 new houses were constructed. In Illinois, the new theatres numbered 92 against 130 out of business. These are typical of the larger centers of population.

In the states with large rural population, besides the example of Iowa already mentioned, take Nebraska with 74 closed or out of business for various reasons as against 22 new houses.

On the Pacific slope, the State of Washington showed more theatres built than were eliminated, the figures standing 45 to 38.

In Florida, where there was great activity during the boom, the present situation is clearly shown by these figures: 61 houses out of business, with only 15 additions.

It is interesting to note that the largest gross loss of theatres was in Pennsylvania, the number being 171; in New York, 146; Ohio, 135; Iowa, 133; and Illinois, 130.

But Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio and Illinois led in the number of new theatres constructed, the total in the four states being 455.

States with heavy net losses were: [illegible] 89; Kansas, 68; Nebraska, 52; showing the increasing disappearance of the smallest theatres.

Detailed study of the table which follows will reveal many other interesting facts:

	No. Theatres March 1, 1927	No. Theatres March 1, 1928	No. Theatres Dismantled or Permanently Closed	No. Theatres Totally Destroyed by Fire	No. Theatres Now Used for Other Entertainment	No. Theatres [illegible]	No. Theatres Opened

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

HAROLD LLOYD'S newest work—"Speedy" it's called and speedy it is—had its New York premiere Friday night, April 6, at the Rivoli Theatre in New York. The first official presentation of the comedy was the feature of The Press Agents' Show, given by the Theatrical Press Representatives of America, whose benefit fund received well deserved enrichment from the event—what with tickets selling at five dollars the copy and the house filled.

"Speedy" promptly won its spurs as a laugh-hit. It scored as the feature of a special performance and as a regular attraction. For opening Saturday its extended engagement at the Rivoli, the count-up on Sunday night showed "Speedy" had run five hundred dollars ahead of any previous take for Saturday and Sunday. Gloria Swanson's "Sadie Thompson" held the Rivoli record which "Speedy" broke over the holiday week-end.

Harold Lloyd this long while has had the desire to do a picture with a New York background, and several times during the past four years has been on the point of carrying out the idea. Whether he saved "Speedy" for New York, or New York for "Speedy" we don't know. But after viewing the work we do know that the New York scene in which the comedian has set his action is the perfect setting for this uproarious collection of comic incident threaded over a strand of story and characterization. The comedian has crowded his film with incident—gags—and the development and timing of each episode shows the care and workmanlike quality which Lloyd brings to his screen creations. His plot and his characterization become lost in the maze of amusing incidents concocted from sound comedy devices, and the picture sums up as a brisk, fast and very stimulating spectacle for the enjoyment of theatregoers of all kinds and varieties.

DISCUSSION over various angles of the recent radio broadcast by film stars goes on. Some exhibitors, basing their views on what happened in their own theatres, condemn it, while others take the opposite position.

One of the most interesting angles is contributed by Thomas D. Soriero, managing director of The Rochester Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. Mr. Soriero declares that the stunt lacked showmanship, in the first place. He says:

"We went to considerable expense in the installation of special leased wires and special loud speakers in order to give the program in its entirety from our stage. We felt that folks who wished to listen in would combine two pleasures in one, and come to the theatre for our superior reception. Frankly, our business was nearly capacity and promptly at nine o'clock, we tuned in. Paul Whiteman's numbers were well received, but when President Wilmer of the Dodge Company started his long address re the new Dodge line of motor cars, the entire stunt was killed. His talk was entirely too long."

CONTINUING, Mr. Soriero says: "When Douglas Fairbanks came on the 'mike,' the audience became very restless, and were thoroughly disappointed with his enunciation on the radio. We were obliged to cut the entire program at this juncture as the audience insisted by healthy and consistent clapping of hands that they did not want to hear any more of the film stars. The writer made a special effort in an announcement from the stage to ascertain whether they wanted our regular bill or the radio. Our regular vaudeville bill had the call.

"I have asked various patrons who listened in at home and many of the newspaper fraternity and they all agree that the entire program was a disappointment.

"The program lacked a touch of showmanship which would inject sufficient variety to make it interesting to the general public. Radio broadcasting is a wonderful advertising medium if used in the proper manner with proper variety and entertainment. Stars speaking over the radio who cannot talk or haven't a voice for broadcasting do harm to their picture prestige. Therefore, radio can do the picture stars a lot of harm and send their stock on drawing power at the box-office down, so it is up to the producer to exercise care in permitting film luminaries to broadcast while under contract to appear in pictures."

ON the other hand, more than 90 per cent of the exhibitors in Kansas City, according to a check-up made by Kansas City newspapers, were of the opinion that the Dodge radio program, featuring widely known screen stars, was beneficial to the screen industry.

"There is no doubt but that the radio program caused a decrease in attendance at motion picture theatres on that particular night," said A. M. Eisner, owner of the Gillis Theatre and former president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas City, "but the exploitation the motion picture industry as a whole received will pay dividends in the end. The more motion pictures can be brought to the public mind the better."

"STREET ANGEL," which opened this week at the Globe Theatre, New York City, is one of the finest pictures ever made, technically; a superb photographic achievement, and as a piece of direction even better than "Seventh Heaven," which won new laurels for Frank Borzage.

Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell give performances that rank very high among all the contributions made by player to screen.

The picture will inevitably be compared to "Seventh Heaven," not because of similarity of theme, but—what is more important—similarity of mood. It is no less unusual than the former work, and it contains a beautiful love story that cannot fail to score at the box-office. But the theme or the story—whichever you will—does not have the depth of "Seventh Heaven," and it is in this particular that "Street Angel" will suffer by comparison.

It is, nevertheless, so fine an achievement that it is useless to spend time in drawing this comparison in detail. On the positive side, "Street Angel" contains perhaps the most remarkable blending of background with story that we have ever seen on the screen. The camera is mobile; it gives an impression of Naples by the simple expedient of moving along two or three street sets, or the waterfront, where the characters, at times, fade into the misty background.

On the whole, we would rank "Street Angel" as a fine box-office attraction, but a little below "Seventh Heaven" in this regard. In all the departments of technique that go to the making of a photoplay, however, it is a magnificent piece of work, and sure of a high place among the best.

Six Held for Alleged Bombing of Hammond State Theatre

AN aftermath of the bombing of the State Theatre in Hammond, Indiana, last November 8th, which caused the destruction of over a million dollars worth of property, has come with the arrest of William Kleighe, lessee of the State Theatre, and interested in a number of other houses; Joe Million, business agent of the Hammond motion picture operators' union and who was operator in the blasted theatre; Harry L. Ames, business agent of the hod carriers' union; James Tuto, business agent of the Hammond finishers' union; Marwood Williams, a trustee of the hod carriers' union and Dean Melloy, said to be a bartender in a saloon at Calumet City.

The six men were seized following a nine weeks' investigation by the Deputy State Fire Marshall Vrooman of Indiana, and are now on bonds totaling $220,000.

Joe Million was the first arrested and according to the authorities, confessed his part in the bombing plot and involved the other men now being held. According to the alleged confession Mr. Kleighe, a majority stockholder in the Northern Theatre Company of Hammond, found when he had leased the State Theatre, that he had a white elephant on his hands, and according to Million, conceived the plot to bomb the big new house.

"He gave me $2,000," Million is alleged to have said. "I kept one half of the money and gave the other half to Harry Ames."

Million is said to have further stated that on the night of the bombing he, being operator at the theatre, left the door open so his co-conspirators could get in without trouble and place the bomb. Williams, Melloy, Ames and Tuto drove up with eight sticks of dynamite that Ames said he had stolen from a Hammond plumbing shop, according to the alleged confession.

Ames and Tuto then went inside with the dynamite, it is said, the other two remaining on the watch outside, carried the explosive to the orchestra pit, lit the fuse and ran out of the theatre.

The State Theatre was practically new and had been erected at a cost of more than a million and a half dollars. The terrific explosion wrecked the house so badly that no effort has ever been made to repair it.

Northwest Has Trouble

Sale of Pictures to Churches and Schools Threatens Action by Association

THE Northwest territory is having its difficulties with non-theatrical showings and there are threats of trouble with companies that are alleged to be supplying film to schools and churches in opposition to regular picture houses. At the present time FBO and United Artists are reported in controversies in this direction.

Minneapolis Film Board of Trade and the Northwest Theater Owners Association have interested themselves in the matter of the Presbyterian Church at Pipestone, Minn., showing pictures in opposition to the regular theatre, and it is thought that some action will be taken to have the shows discontinued except for the showing of educational and religious subjects.

The management of the Orpheum theater in Pipestone, one of the finest houses in that part of Minnesota, has made no complaint, but other exhibitors in the neighborhood of Pipestone are up in arms because FBO has sold to the church, in spite of the fact that there is a regular licensed theater in the town. They state that they may take the matter up with the fire marshal's office as the church does not meet the requirements of the law concerning exits, fire extinguishers, etc.

They point out that it would take years for the church to buy an organ with its receipts, the reason for which the pictures are being shown, and that it is not fair to the owner of the Orpheum, who has a heavy investment in his theater.

United Artists through Manager Hayman of the Minneapolis branch has declared that when they can not sell to a regular exhibitor they will sell to churches, "school, livery stable or tent." This was the answer to the trouble which has arisen through the selling of U. A. product to the school at Lake Crystal, Minn. Manager Pesava of the Crystal theater in that town has cancelled the three remaining pictures on his contract with United Artists on the grounds of unfair trade practice. He says he will carry his lease to the highest court in the land if it is necessary.

Organizers Work for Big Attendance at Minneapolis

It is expected that the fifteenth annual convention of the Northwest Theatre Owners Association to be held in Minneapolis on May 1 and 2 will have one of the largest turn-outs in the history of such meetings in the northwest. District organizers acting at the request of the board of directors and some self-appointed because of conditions affecting them personally are busily working to have the largest representation possible. President Steffes has urged that all theatre owners in the territory come to the convention and air their grievances there instead of attacking the organization through the trade press. Early indications are that the fight will center on the election of officers, with the candidates lining up for or against arbitration and trade abuses.

Saenger Building Theatre in Biloxi, Mississippi

A combination road show and motion picture theatre costing $150,000 will be built in Biloxi, Miss., by Saenger Theatres, Inc., a 25-year lease having been signed between the Saenger corporation of New Orleans, La., and Mrs. Loretta L. Yerger of Bixoli. The new theatre is expected to be ready in the fall. It will be a duplicate of the Gainsville, Fla., theatre with interior decorations similar to the $2,500,000 Saenger house in New Orleans.

The building will be 75 by 168 and the entire structure will cost $500,000. Work will begin as soon as plans are completed by Roy A. Benjamin of Jacksonville, Fla.

New Officers Elected by Albany Film Board

At the annual meeting of the Albany Film Board of Trade, held during the past week, Howard Morgan, local manager of the Educational exchange, was re-elected president: Isadore Schmertz, manager of the Fox exchange, was elected vice-president, while H. O. Worden, manager of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchange, was elected treasurer, succeeding Jack Bulwinkel, who recently resigned as Albany manager of the First National exchange. Miss Edna A. Pfister was elected secretary. The board of directors will consist of Messrs. Morgan, Schmertz and Worden, together with Nat Levy, local manager for Universal.

Hotels Chosen for First National Conventions

Meeting places for First National's three spring sales conventions in Atlantic City, Kansas City and San Francisco have been definitely decided upon. The Muelbach Hotel in Kansas City will house the Mid-West gathering which convenes on May 1st, and which will last for three days. The Ambassador Hotel in Atlantic City will hold the eastern salesmen, who will be in conclave for three days, beginning April 27th. The St. Francis Hotel, in San Francisco, will be the site of the three-day meet which starts on May 7th.

Changes in Paramount Sales Organization

M. R. Clark has replaced E. H. Brauer as manager of the Paramount exchange in Columbus, O. Arthur Cole, manager of the Paramount office in Kansas City, has resigned owing to ill health. Oscar Morgan, former manager of the Dallas office of Paramount, will take over the management of the exchange in Kansas City.

Hays Busy on French Quota Law

Confers With High Government Officials; Striking Developments Possible; Paris Hays Office Is Opened

By L. C. MOEN

(Paris Correspondent, The News)

Paris, April 3.

WILL H. HAYS arrived in Paris this week and quietly took command of the American offensive against the French film quota. From his suite at the Hotel Crillon he is directing America's last stand against a decree which is perhaps the most drastic regulatory legislation ever directed against motion pictures.

Outwardly, of course, these is no campaign and no offensive. It is a situation calling for the utmost tact and diplomacy. The very fact that the situation is serious enough to bring Mr. Hays from Fifth Avenue all the way to the Place de la Concorde is evidence enough of the care with which it must be handled.

The first tangible result has been the opening of the first actual foreign branch of the Hays office, at Number 47, avenue de l'Opera, in charge of Harold L. Smith, until recently vice-consul here. Colonel Lowry will continue as European representative at large, dividing his time among Paris, London, Berlin and wherever else he may be needed.

Immediately upon his arrival Mr. Hays plunged into conferences with all of the American film representatives in Paris, to inform himself fully on all phases of the situation. A daily luncheon is being held at the Cafe de la Paix. He was the guest of honor at an important luncheon at the American Embassy.

French Film Law Unique

Then came vital conferences with high government officials. There will be more. Of these we are permitted to say little as yet. Mr. Hays is, as usual, working along political and diplomatic lines, and it may be said without violation of confidence that he recognizes that the film industry and the commission present a solidly united front, and that any modification which is brought about will have to come through other and perhaps higher channels.

Economically, the new French film law is an unique affair. Governments have long regulated imports, restricting them or augmenting them, as the case might be—but this is the first instance, so far as we know, where a government has attempted, by direct decree, to enforce exports. Just what the economic results of such a move can be, only time will tell.

I am given to understand, in certain commercial quarters, that other French manufacturers are afraid that America and perhaps other nations may retaliate with similar legislation in other lines—that America, for instance, may say to France: "All right, if you want to sell us French perfume, you must take one bottle of American perfume for every four bottles of French perfume we let you export to us," or "You must take one American dress for every four Paris gowns which come to New York."

I also understand that in certain high government circles it is felt that the new decree is not altogether in accordance with the letter and spirit of the Geneva agreement on free trade and exports [illegible] important item to France.

French film men feel, on the other hand, that the showing of a few French productions in America each year will give stimulating variety to the American screen, cost the American companies little, and be only a fair exchange for the business done here. They also feel, and no doubt rightly, that a reasonable restriction in the number of films placed on this market (far smaller than the American market) can only benefit everyone. And, as a matter of fact, some of the American representatives here feel the same way.

Films Promote International Amity

Mr. Hays, however, has very wisely placed the whole matter on a very high plane of international goodwill and amity, rather than commerce and economics. He says:

"My chief concern is to make certain that we develop in American films their maximum usefulness in the promotion of international amity. The motion picture is, indeed, the universal language. We are determined that American films shall sympathetically and accurately tell the story of the nationals of each country to the nationals of all others through this universal language so that all peoples may understand each other. When they understand each other they cannot hate, and when they do not hate they will not make war."

Paramount Is Denied New Trial

Court in Texas Overrules Motion in $337,500 Case Brought by Stinnett and Charninsky

JUDGE F. O. MCKENZIE, sitting in a Dallas, Texas, court last Saturday overruled the Paramount-Publix motion for a new trial in connection with the verdict of $337,500 recently awarded to Ray Stinnett and Si Charninsky, Dallas theatre men. The original verdict was in a damage suit brought against Paramount-Publix, the Dallas Building and Realty Company and others, alleging violation of the state anti-trust laws.

The suit was based on claims of the Dallas men that the defendants virtually forced them to close the Capitol Theatre in Dallas by refusing to lease to them first-class films. It was alleged that the defendants' action constituted a violation of the state anti-trust laws and the heavy damages asked for were allowed.

The motion for a new trial was overruled by District Judge McKenzie, sitting in Judge Royal R. Watkins' Ninety-fifth District courtroom after it had been argued two hours by defendants' counsel. An appeal will be taken, it is said, by the defendants.

The original trial was held about six weeks ago with Stinnett and Charninsky testifying that they were forced to sell their Capitol because of their inability to get first-run product. It required the jury but little more than an hour to bring a verdict for the complainants of $150,000 actual damages and $187,000 exemplary damages.

Notice of appeal was given immediately on the ground that inadmissable evidence had been introduced and that the suit was brought by a partnership, whereas, if there had been any injury it was to the corporation, and the partners had been paid for their stock. The defense offered no witnesses.

Charninsky at the trial read a letter alleged to have been written by Harold B. Franklin, then of Publix, asking the plaintiffs to refrain from booking Pantages vaudeville into the Capitol, pointing out the move would bring about a destructive competitive situation, stating the city could not support two vaudeville houses and declaring Loew vaudeville was to be removed from the Melba. The Capitol has been splitting First National product, but after booking Pantages vaudeville, a split on that or any other preferred product the following season was refused it, it was claimed, with Loew vaudeville brought back to the Melba. Charninsky said that on a visit to Franklin he was told he would be deprived of all choice of film.

Following the failure of the defendants to get a new trial on appeal, it is said that the filing of other conspiracy suits through Texas would follow in the near future, with the possibility of the attorney general instituting a probe of the activities of circuits throughout the state.

It is said that the defendants in the latest suit will undoubtedly carry their plea to the higher courts and that it might eventually get to the Supreme Court of the United States if necessary.

Boston Planning Latest Exhibitor Cooperative Organization

THE organization established in New York State by Aaron Sapiro which brought together a large number of independent exhibitors into an exhibitor cooperative buying plan as well as a protective organization along other lines for the independents, is now being taken up in other cities.

From Pittsburgh came the announcement last week of a similar organization being perfected there, and now the Boston territory is reported proceeding along the same lines. It is not yet known whether these two organizations will be allied with the Sapiro group or whether they will function independently.

For the present, it is said, the Sapiro organization will confine its activities to New York State, at least until it is determined whether extension to other states would in any way violate the interstate commerce laws.

Surplus To Decide Tax

Increased Exemptions on Admissions Will Depend Upon Excess in Treasury in June

INCREASE in the exemption from admission tax and other changes in the revenue law depend entirely upon the amount of surplus that the Treasury will have at the end of the present fiscal year, on June 30, members of the Senate Finance Committee were told April 3 by Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon.

Present indications are that the surplus for the current fiscal year will be in the neighborhood of $212,000,000, which would permit a tax reduction aggregating $200,000,000 Secretary Mellon said. This is $25,000,000 less than the original estimate of the Treasury as to possible tax reduction, due to increases in appropriations. This estimate, however, does not take into consideration any expenditures that may be made for flood relief or other matters now unanticipated, but if $30,000,000 is expended for flood relief during the next fiscal year, the surplus of $212,000,000 will be reduced to $182,000,000 and will necessitate a considerable change in the tax reduction program.

On the basis of a $212,000,000 surplus, the Treasury Department, Mr. Mellon said, approves the increase in the exemption from admission tax from 75 cents to $1, as provided in the revenue bill passed by the House of Representatives December 15. This will result in a reduction in revenue of about $8,000,000. If, however, the surplus is only $182,000,000, the exemption from admission tax should not be increased.

The Secretary also expressed approval of recommendations that the general corporation income tax rate be reduced from 13½ to 12 per cent and that the rates applicable to incomes between $14,000 and $75,000 be revised, and that the estate tax be repealed. In the event that the surplus is only the lower figure this would constitute practically all of the tax revision recommended by the Treasury, but if the surplus is in excess of $200,000,000 it is recommended that the increase in the exemption of corporations with incomes not in excess of $25,000 be increased from $2,000 to $3,000.

The Secretary voiced a solemn warning against extravagant tax reduction pointing out that the cost of our Federal Government is already borne to a very large extent by the comparatively small number who pay direct taxes. "A further material reduction in indirect taxes," he said, "will produce a very ill-balanced tax system under which our National Government will be supported not by the entire body of our citizens, but by a limited class. The cost of the Government of all should not be borne by the few.

The plea of the legitimate theatres for reduction of the admission tax was submitted to the Senate Finance Committee April 10 at the beginning of hearings on the revenue reduction bill by William A. Brady, of New York, representing the legitimate houses.

Mr. Brady, who has performed the same task several times in the past, again reviewed the theatrical situation, describing the great reduction in the number of legitimate houses throughout the country, and declared that repeal of the admission tax is very vital to the drama. He charged that every other sales tax imposed during the war has been lifted or reduced with the exception of the admission tax as it applies to the legitimate drama.

Mr. Brady went into the motion picture situation, pointing out that the film houses have been given some relief through increase in the exemption from 50 to 75 cents, which, he declared, very largely meets the need of that branch of the industry for tax relief.

A plea for action on the admission tax was also submitted to the committee by Frank Gilmore, executive secretary of the Equity organization, who declared that much of the difficulty in which the legitimate drama finds itself today is due to this tax.

Malden, Mass., May Have Sunday Show Referendum

Mayor John D. Devir of Malden, Mass., has declined to issue Sunday theatre licenses until a better understanding of the situation is brought about in that city. It is of interest to note that the ministers of the city made no protest of the Sunday licenses which have been issued in the past but that the protest was from a group of citizens. There is said to be equally strong pressure being brought to bear for continuation of the Sunday evening shows by another group of citizens. Talk of a referendum vote by the citizens on the matter is being generally heard and may come with the voting in the Fall.

Bandits Loot 2 Theatres in Detroit

Five bandits last Tuesday entered the offices of C. H. Miles' Oriental Theatre in Detroit and took $12,000, box-office receipts collected over a period of two and a half days during which all banks were closed. The bandits threatened the lives of Jules C. Wetesky, general manager, and two women employes and before leaving bound them with adhesive tape.

More than $400 was stolen later in the week when two thugs forced Edgar E. Kirchner, manager of the Family Theatre, also in Detroit, to open the office safe.

"Dawn" Approved for New York

Editor of German Trade Paper, "Lichtbildbuhne", Protests Fraenkel Article in News

JOHN WINGATE, director of the Division of Motion Pictures of the State Department of Education of New York has approved the British film, "Dawn," based on the career of Edith Cavell and showing her trial and execution. A few subtitles and certain scenes are to be eliminated.

While the picture has not been licensed by the state, Mr. Wingate has written to Arch Selwyn, owner of the American rights to the film, indicating the changes he considered desirable, and these will be made at once, according to Mr. Selwyn. The latter expressed pleasure at the attitude taken by Mr. Wingate, though he questioned the right of the state to order the changes suggested.

Discussing the matter Mr. Selwyn said:

"I feel that the film has been fairly treated and that Mr. Wingate deserves commendation for refraining from any attempt to extend the powers of his office in order to placate those who have brought great pressure on him to prevent the film from being shown here.

"I expect to show the film in the Times Square Theatre within a short time, although the date has not yet been fixed. It runs about an hour and a half on the screen. The changes are of a very minor nature and do not impair the value of the picture in the least.

"One of the changes concerns the trial. Miss Cavell is provided with counsel by the Court. Direction was given us to insert a subtitle showing that this was the usual custom. We will insert this subtitle gladly, although I do not understand why the authorities should concern themselves with points of this kind.

"I have the power to object and take the changes ordered to the Appellate Court, but on the whole I am so well satisfied with the treatment of the film that I will comply with the rulings without question."

In addition to the approval of Director Wingate, the film has also been passed by the London County Council and it is expected it will be on display in a London theatre shortly.

Editor Wolffsohn of the German trade paper Lichtbildbuhne has taken exception to an article printed in Motion Picture News, issue of March 17th, under the signature of Heinrich Fraenkel, Berlin correspondent of the "News." Mr. Wolffsohn's letter to William A. Johnston, publisher of the "News" follows in translation, in part:

"As I have had the pleasure of meeting you personally during my stay in New York in 1924, I therefore feel quite certain that you will grant the request, which I am forced to make, appealing to your loyalty. I know and esteem your valued publication, "The Motion Picture News" too much, not to be convinced of the fact that your own feeling of loyalty will not allow a false report to stand unaltered, such as has been inserted in your paper through no fault of yours.

"The announcement referred to concerns my own person and is contained in the article of Mr. Heinrich Fraenkel in regard to the Cavell film, under the heading "News' Berlin Correspondent says 'Dawn' is not anti-German," which appeared in the issue of March 17th, 1928.

"The part of said article to which I particularly object is the following:

" 'The editor of the German trade paper 'Lichtbildbuhne' agreeing with me that 'no man should be condemned without a hearing,' has fallen in with my suggestion to exhibit the film in his private theatre to a couple of hundred journalists, M. P.'s and Government officials . . .'

"This statement is not a fact. I do not by any means agree with the point of view of Mr. Fraenkel with regard to the film 'Dawn,' and my publication, 'The Lichtbildbuhne,' has always held the following stand with regard to this film: Even without having seen the film, one must, regardless of nationality, decline a film whose theme and general character must [illegible] flame the violent emotions of hate and distrust between the nations. One does not commercialize on the tragic death of a woman.

"This is my stand, also that of the 'Lichtbildbuhne,' which has again and again been expressed and published by ourselves. Regardless of the fact that I would reject every film which, like the film 'Dawn,' arouses the hate instincts between nations, I had offered the use of my private projection room to Mr. Wilcox, at his request, which was conveyed to me by Mr. Fraenkel. However, this act of courtesy on my part was not intended to show that I sided in any way with the film.

"After the above statement of facts, I must ask you, my dear Mr. Johnston, to right the article of March 17th, insofar as my personal opinion with regard to the film 'Dawn' is concerned, in your next issue, so that I am not blamed in America with the acceptance of said film, which film does not meet with my approval nor that of the German public.

"I am convinced that you will gladly grant my request, as you, even as much as I, are in favor of a bringing together of the nations and for a internationalizing of motion pictures."

Additional Stars, Directors and Writers Signed for Most Extensive Program of Company

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION has definitely announced a program of thirty-six pictures for the 1928-29 season. These will include ten "specials," which will be produced on a more elaborate scale than the others, but will be part of the so-called "Perfect Thirty-Six" and will not be sold separately.

Among the new players is Lya De Putti, while the scenario department has been augmented with the addition of Norman Springer, Harvey Thew and Harriet Hinsdale.

A large number of stories and plays were considered by Columbia before they definitely determined upon a program of thirty-six. The company has already secured some outstanding vehicles and is negotiating for additional works.

Also it is planned to increase the [illegible] from departments with the addition of several new high type executives, that the increased product may be properly handled.

Shoolman Deal Probably Off; United Buys Two Poli Houses

THE United Theatres Co., Inc., of which A. F. Winstrom is president, announces that it has acquired two of the Poli Theatres, as rumored last week. The theatres are the Plaza in Worcester and the Lyric at Bridgeport, Conn.

Formal announcement of the purchase of these houses would indicate that the negotiations for the sale of the complete Poli Circuit to Max Shoolman and others of Boston, negotiations for which have been under way for a number of months, have terminated.

All of the theatres in the Poli Circuit are being operated and are reported as doing excellent business during the several months just passed.

Sale of the two theatres mentioned is the first break in many years in the Poli Circuit and in some quarters it is taken as evidence that the circuit may be eventually split up.

Keith-Albee interests are known to have secured valuable options in the cities in which the Poli Circuit operates but no further activity along the lines of construction of theatres by the Keith-Albee interests have taken place. Indications are that all parties interested are marking time.

M. P. Engineers Discuss Many Problems

Annual Spring Sessions Under Way at Los Angeles Develop Keenest Interest of Delegates

THE Spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers opened at the Roosevelt Hotel in Los Angeles Monday of this week and will continue until Saturday. Good progress was made at the sessions in the fore-part of the week and it was expected that by concluding time of the sessions the convention would be among the most productive ever held by the association. Matters of considerable importance were under consideration and a number of interesting papers on various phases of the mechanical end of the industry were read.

The delegates were welcomed on the opening day of the session by President W. B. Cook, after which papers were read as follows: "A Line Screen Film Process for Motion Pictures in Color," by J. H. Powrie; "Reproduction of Mobility of Form and Color by the Motion Picture Kaleidoscope," by L. A. Jones and C. H. Tuttle, of Eastman Kodak Company; "Some Technical Photographic Problems and Their Solutions," by J. W. Coffman; "Some Novel Motion Picture Presentations" by L. M. Townsend and W. H. Hennessy.

Among other papers read during the week were the following:

"The Technical Status of the Film Laboratory" by L. M. Griffith, Paramount studio; "Motion Photomicrographs of the Progress of the Development of a Photographic Image" by C. H. Tuttle, Eastman Kodak; "Machine Development of M. P. Negative Film" by Roy Hunter. Universal studio; "Some Notes on the Making of Duplicate Negatives" by J. G. Capstaff. Eastman Kodak, "Moisture in M. P. Film" by V. P. Sease, DuPont-Pathe "Preservation of M. P. Film" by J. E. Crabtree and C. E. Ives, Eastman Kodak; "Systematic Control in the Making of Motion Pictures" by R Nauman, Paramount studio; "Aviation M. P. Photography" by Harry Perry, A.S.C. "Needs of the Trick Cinematographer" by Douglas Shearer, A.S.C. "Method of Producing the Sound Effects to Accompany "Wings" by Ro yJ. Pomeroy, A.S.C.; "Dramatic Cinematography" by Charles Rosher, A.S.C. and Karl Strauss, A.S.C.

"Scenario Writing" by Jeanie McPherson; "The Operation of a Central Casting Bureau" by F. Beetson, Association of M. P. Producers; "The M. P. Director" by Irvin Wilat; "The M. P. Art Director" by Cedric Gibons and Mitchel Leisen; "A System of Motion Pictures with Sound" by H. B. Marvin, General Electric.

Addresses of welcome, in addition to that made by President Cook, were given by Lieutenant Governor Fitz of California. Fred Niblo, Fred Beetson and John W. Boyle. The delegates were guests at dinner during the week given by the American Society of Cinematographers and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Among the events under discussion during the week was the formation of a Pacific Coast Division of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. This branch is being sponsored by William V. D. Kelly and a decision on it was looked for before the sessions adjourned. Fifty prospective members would form the nucleus of the division.

The importance of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences was stressed at the meetings, especially in connection with its investigations in Mazda lighting and other steps to promote motion picture technology.

"The Academy composed of nearly all important personages of the five creative branches of motion picture production, is a unique experiment in organization engineering, being an attempt to unite the memberships of five creative branches of motion picture production for the common good," states Secretary Frank Woods. "It is not a company union, its main purpose being the advancement of the motion picture as an institution and in all its arts and sciences. It has been obliged, however, to become temporarily interested in employment problems, such as uniform contracts, for the purpose of promoting harmonious relations within the industry, but only as a necessary preliminary step toward unified effort.

"At the time the Academy was organized it found each studio with its own rules, methods and forms of contracts. Employment relations were without recognized standards. Various abuses existed that demanded correction. In the interest of the industry as a whole the Academy has been able to act promptly in these matters by the friendly cooperation of its branches."

Gourland, president of Phoenix Photoplay Exchanges of America, returned to New York this week after a trip abroad during which he obtained distribution rights in America and in Canada for a number of European productions, including a Russo-German production which the Derussa company will produce in Berlin. He was made a director of the French company which has finished "Vira Merzeva" and "Expiation," both of which he will distribute.

The international angle is being stressed in the German and French studios, reports Mr. Gourland, declaring the German-French interests are on the lookout for American stars.

The Stanley Company of America, already operating four motion picture theatres in Albany, N. Y., will erect a 1,600 seat house this summer in the residential section of the city, on land that was bought a year or so ago. Officials of the company, together with Thomas W. The three residences now occupying the site of the coming theatre will be sold at once, and probably moved.

Safier Joins "U" as Long Run Department Head

Morris Safier decided last week to cast his lot with Universal. In his new capacity he will undertake immediately plans for the road-showing and long-run distribution of Universal's specials.

Protection Fight Brisk

Many First Run Chains Now Urging Twenty-five Mile Area With Thirty Days Clearence

THE matter of protection to first and subsequent runs on pictures continues to be the subject of many controversies which promise some lively action in the near future. Protection is now being asked more or less generally over a radius of twenty-five miles, and for a period of thirty days for first runs.

From Detroit comes the word that the Butterfield Circuit is seeking such protection. This chain includes seventy-five theatres, which practically control all first runs of the territory outside of Detroit.

This demand is an increase over that provided in Detroit's new zoning agreement which goes into effect May 1st. This new agreement was drafted by the Film Board and the state exhibitor unit. It provides maximum protection of 28 days from the last day of exhibition by the first runs, to 7 days protection for second runs. It also grants protection of 21 days for first runs of houses in key zones.

Denver is also reported in a protection controversy, with the Metropolitan, the new Publix house, asking that the radius cover a twenty-five mile area with a minimum clearance of 30 days. This, Publix contends, is in line with similar extended protection being sought in other key cities.

Since the opening of the Metropolitan in Denver competition is reported keener than ever, and every effort is being made by all classes of houses to corral patronage. The battle for business has been so spirited that some of the houses have already resorted to price cutting and numerous other methods to lure the trade.

Telephoto Movies Near

New Developments in Transmission of Pictures Will Make Big Improvements, Experts Say

WHILE the first telephotograph applied to motion pictures in transmitting pictures of Vilma Banky from Chicago to New York was accomplished last week and the result was not entirely satisfactory, it is thought likely that big improvements will come in the near future. Among these improvements will be the handling of pictures with standard width film.

Negatives five by seven are now transmitted over the wire and in order to handle motion picture film it is necessary to cut the negative into strips, which are clamped in the five by seven inch frames. By converting the cylinder which receives the photographs delivery after transmission will be speeded up. The main fault with the transmission of the pictures last week was that they were a trifle cloudy when flashed upon the screen, but those who are conducting the experiments are confident this can be overcome.

At the same time, Ray Hall, editor of Pathe News, is among those who do not believe the telephoto transmission of motion pictures can be applied to advantage by the news weeklies. Hall has been conducting experiments of his own along these lines for the past year or so, and had the following to say:

"The American Telephone and Telegraph Co. is to be commended for its enterprise in the transmission of this motion picture, but the application of the method to news reels is still very far off, if indeed it will ever be feasible. The Pathe News has conducted experiments for a number of months along similar lines. Negatives have been transmitted for us, but they have not been reproduced upon the screen since they were too crude. Our experts have discovered that the transmission of ordinary negative without enlargement is impossible under present methods because the light beam is too wide to permit reproduction of detail. This especially affects new pictures where crowds are shown, or in long shots covering considerable territory."

J. D. Williams Plans Many Exchanges for U. S. and Canada

J. D. WILLIAMS, managing director of United Motion Picture Producers, Ltd., of London, is planning an extensive system of exchanges for the United States and Canada, according to advices just received from London. According to the plan there will be between 26 and 32 of these exchanges in the United States and 5 in Canada. It is expected they will all be in operation by September.

The first steps taken in the organization of the system will be with the arrival of Mr. Williams in New York in the near future. The company which Mr. Williams heads will handle between 25 and 40 British and Continental films during the first year. It is a British organization backed by British capital, but will not do any producing of its own. It is prepared, however, to advance money for British production.

To Make Films for U. S.

Outcome of Quota Negotiations Not to Affect French Firm's Schedule to Produce for World Markets

IRRESPECTIVE of the outcome of negotiations now being conducted in Paris with regard to the French film quota law enacted by that country and specifying a four-for-one basis for motion picture distribution between France and the United States, the Societe Generale de Films, one of the most important production companies in Europe, will make three or four feature productions a year designed for world distribution, including the market in this country, according to Frederick de la Roziere, one of the directors of the Societe Generale, who has been here for several months in connection with the business of his organization.

Mr. de la Roziere states that the production scheme to be followed by his company will be directed toward the making of a certain number of feature pictures based on subjects of universal appeal and produced in accordance with standards developed by the leading directors of this and other countries. It is probable that the Societe Generale will also make a number of photoplays of lesser magnitude and designed for European audiences only.

The newest production completed by the company is an elaborate spectacle dealing with the trial and martyrdom of Joan of Arc. This is titled "The Passion of Joan of Arc," and arrangements for its distribution in the United States are now being concluded by Mr. de la Roziere. The film is in eight reels and was directed by Carl Dreyer, who produced "The Master of the House," "Michael" and several important pictures made by the Ufa Company. The scenario was written by Joseph Delteil, recognized as one of the leading contemporary authorities on the subject. The art direction was in the hands of Worms, remembered in this country for his work on "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari."

The title role in "The Passion of Joan of Arc" is impersonated by Mlle. Falconetti, a prominent French actress, and the important role of the Bishop Cauchon, who presided at the trial of Joan, is played by M. Sylvain, dean of the Comedie Francaise and a renowned European actor.

The trial and death of Joan of Arc of 500 years ago is set upon the screen. According to the ancients any drama should possess a unity of time, of space and of action. By that they meant that the action should not be distributed by long breaks of time, by shifting of locations or by the introduction of extraneous incidents or motivation. "The Passion of Joan of Arc" fulfills these requirements.

The Societe Generale's "Napoleon," which preceded "The Passion of Joan of Arc" on the production schedule, is to be released in the United States by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Mr. de la Roziere said that the future productions which ultimately will be presented to American audiences will be filmed by such prominent European directors as Gance, Dreyer, Raymond Bernard, Maurice Tourneur and Pabst.

Territories Sold on Brenda Production

BRENDA PICTURES has sold ten territories on its production, "The Port of Missing Girls," within the past month.

Harry Asher has bought the New England rights and is giving the picture its premiere at the Modern and Beacon Theatres in Boston and has also booked it at the Roger Sherman in New Haven. Bert Adler has purchased the upper New York State rights and announces a booking into the Lafayette theatre in Buffalo and another at the Rochester Theatre in Rochester.

Commonwealth Film Company has the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey rights and is negotiating for a Broadway theatre for the picture's metropolitan premiere. Harry Grelle of Pittsburgh has acquired the Western Pennsylvania and Virginia rights. Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia has taken over Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia rights. S. G. Honeck has acquired the rights for Wisconsin and Upper Michigan.

Baseball Goes Unmolested in Baltimore on Sundays

The Sunday motion picture test case which was recently tried in a Baltimore court in which the three principals were convicted is now up before the Court of Appeals.

No action, however, has been taken against the holding of baseball games at Oriole Park which come under the head of Sunday Amusements also.

Programs are sold at the ball park in lieu of admissions in the same manner that was followed at the performance for movie test case.

Slack Period at Mines Will Affect Theatres

Exhibitors of southern Illinois will be hard hit through the suspension of work by all of the larger mines of that territory because of the failure of the miners and operators to get together on a new wage agreement. The old contract expired on March 31st. The prospects are that the miners will not go back to work until next October, it is said.

Photophone Due Shortly On Market

RCA Is Organizing Sales Force to Distribute "Talking Movie" Device for Use Even in Homes

RCA Photophone, Inc., recently organized, is about ready to place on the market the Photophone, formerly known as the Kinegraphone, the talking motion picture device perfected by the General Electric Company, the Radio Corporation of America and the General Electric Company. The new company was launched for the distribution of the Photophone and a staff of salesmen is now being assembled.

FBO started some time ago in experimenting with pictures to be seen and heard on Photophone and their product will be the first distributed, as the companies responsible for the device recently purchased an interest in FBO.

Major General James G. Harbord, president of the Radio Corporation of America, will act as chairman of the board of directors of Photophone, Inc., and the device, which synchronizes motion pictures with voice and music, will be sold to motion picture theatres, schools, churches and other institutions. Engineers of the radio group are now at work on a simplified photophone apparatus that will be suitable for use in the homes, which, it is said, will make it possible to reproduce talking movies in the home very much as the ordinary radio broadcast programs are now being received.

General Harbord announced that the other members of the board of directors would be Owen D. Young, Gerard Swope, Paul D. Cravath, E. M. Herr, E. W. Harden, Cornelius N. Bliss, James R. Sheffield and David Sarnoff.

The president of the new company will be David Sarnoff and Elmer E. Bucher will be vice-president, in charge of commercial activities. Doctor A. N. Goldsmith will be vice-president in charge of tchnical matters. The other officers of the company will be George S. De Sousa, treasurer; Lewis MacConnach, secretary, and Charles J. Ross, comptroller. A board of consulting engineers has been created and its members are: A. N. Goldsmith, C. W. Stone and S. M. Kintner.

In discussing the formation of the new company, Mr. Sarnoff pointed out that although the Radio Corporation, General Electric and Westinghouse had been preparing for several years to market apparatus synchronozing voice and music with motion pictures, public introduction of the apparatus had been delayed until the engineers had achieved "complete practicability" so that it would be as simple to operate as a radio set, and, at the same time, highly perfected.

"The Photophone," said Mr. Sarnoff, "is both simple and practical. The essential principle is the recording of pictures and sound on one film. While various methods have been devised for 'talking movies,' experience has shown that the most practical is that of recording pictures and sound on the same film. This is the method employed by the Photophone. It is now possible to photograph the President of the United States—voice as well as action—and to distribute films reproducing the event throughout the country.

"Easily operated reproducing apparatus for use in theatres, schools and churches will be nationally available. An entire opera, musical comedy or drama can be electrically recorded on the film, just as it is seen and heard, and then reproduced from the same film. Whatever can be seen or heard, whether it is a nightingale singing or an army in battle, can now be recorded and reproduced for both the eye and the ear. Moving picture dramas with complete orchestral accompaniment, or with music and speech, will be available for nation-wide use.

"Standard films without the sound can be used without any change in the machine. The only thing the operator has to do is to close one switch when he is projecting pictures with sound, and open it when he does not want the sound. Any type of 'talking film' can be used in the machine. The type of sound reproducer to be used will vary with the size of the room in which the pictures are to be shown. The reproducer embodies some remarkable new developments in acoustics."

The steady development of the "home movie" business, whether with or without synchronized sound accompaniment, has long been regarded as at least a potential menace to the purely theatrical end of the motion picture business and the recent Photophone, Inc., announcement seems to have fanned a smouldering fire of opposition into a real blaze.

A. Julian Brylawski, president of the M. P. T. O. of the District of Columbia and chairman of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A., wired New York, Friday, as follows: "The exhibitors of Washington, D. C., view with alarm the spread of home showings of motion pictures as the greatest danger now menacing the industry. This matter should have the attention of the coming convention of the M. P. T. O. A. and means found to curb this most unnecessary non-theatrical competition and more especially talking movies."

Bombers in Seattle Damage Embassy

BOMB outrages against theatres in Seattle, Washington, continued last week when the Embassy, downtown first run house which is open all night, was last week shaken by a 'pineapple' hurled from a truck into its lobby. The interior was damaged and employes were knocked to the floor by the force of the explosion. A panic among the patrons was prevented. This is the fourth bomb attack in Seattle in three months. India Product Popular

Natives Prefer Home Made Pictures to Those Produced in America and Germany

IN a report made by William Scott, far eastern representative of FBO Pictures Corporation to Colvin W. Brown, vice president, Mr. Scott says that the majority of theatre managers in India informed him that they draw from 40 per cent to 50 per cent bigger houses with local productions and comparatively the same increase in box office receipts. Of the three hundred theatres in India, Mr. Scott reports, approximately one hundred and forty exclusively show locally produced Indian and Burmese pictures.

There are four producing companies in India, one at Calcutta and three at Bombay. During 1927, approximately fifty Indian pictures were released in that country, and it is anticipated that with the improved facilities of production, the number of films will be increased to about one hundred during this year.

The programs when they consist of American or European product, average about 10,000 feet. They consist of a feature, a comedy and a newsreel. Seven and eight reel features are most popular. If the feature picture is six reels or less, another feature is included in the program. All projectors are operated by hand, because the natives cannot be trusted with motor driven projectors.

The most popular American and European films are, consistently enough, Oriental dramas with plenty of action, spectacular dramas, action dramas, comedy dramas and slap-stick comedies. The domestic drama and the sophisticated love story are not popular.

Censorship of American and European pictures is administered by the Government under the control of European officials at Bombay, Calcutta, Rangoon and Colombo. Under ordinary circumstances, once a picture is passed at either of the offices, it holds good for the whole of the [illegible]. Any presidency can, however, veto a certificate granted by another office. For instance, "Damaged Goods" was passed in Calcutta and banned in Bombay. Such happenings, however, have been very rare in the case of imported pictures.

A Government Commission is at present visiting all parts of India, taking evidence from all sections of the community, owing to the agitation for stricter censorship. It is anticipated that the present regulations, which have not been strictly adhered to, will be considerably tightened. The Commission is also investigating the advantages —and disadvantages—of introducing the quota system for enforcing the exhibition of British made pictures.

It is imperative for American productions to be copyrighted in England (covering India, Burma and Ceylon) simultaneously with the American release, otherwise the selling of exclusive rights for that territory proves an unusually difficult problem. "Ben Hur," "The Thief of Bagdad" and other big attractions were pirated in India. Despite the copyright in England, there is no jurisdiction over them in the independent states, because these states are entirely independent of British India, and are ruled by their own princes. From information Mr. Scott secured in Bombay, he learned that pirated copies can be imported promiscuously into these states without interference, and action can only be taken when and where they enter British India.

"U" to Reopen Studios

Production Activities Will Be Resumed at Universal City About May 1st

UNIVERSAL has completed plans for the reopening of the company studio at Universal City on May 1st, when a number of the coming season's features and short comedies will go into production. The first pictures to go into work will be one of five serials which are planned. It is titled, "The Diamond Master," by Jacques Futrelle, and adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story.

At about the same time Leigh Jason will start the direction of a series of underworld pictures titled, "The Eyes of the World," by William Lester. Ted Wells will start on a new series of western features, the first of which will be "A Riding Romance," in which he will be supported by Miss Vonceil Viking.

Edmund Cobb will be among those who will get busy early on the first of a series of two-reel Forest Ranger pictures. Bob Curwood will start a series of twelve stunt cowboy two reelers, and George Chandler, former vaudeville star, will get under way with a series of twelve Tenderfoot pictures.

About the first of June production will be started on another serial, "The Pirate of Panama," from the story by William McLeon Raine. Feature production for the new season will be resumed at about the same time. Laura La Plante will then start on one of her specials for next Fall, probably "The Last Warning," which Paul Leni is to make. Reginald Denny will return to the studio a little later. Also, Glenn Tryon and Hoot Gibson are due shortly to plunge into next year's picture schedule.

Preliminary plans for the making of "The Showboat" are well along, and its initial production move may be timed for a date shortly after the studio reopens. A new "Cohens and Kellys" picture will be put into production at the earliest possible moment.

In addition to the serials already mentioned, Universal will make, "Tarzan, the Mighty," "The Final Reckoning" and "The Mystery Rider." "Tarzan, the Mighty," "The Final Reckoning" and "The Pirate of Panama" will be twelve chapters of two reels each and "The Mystery Rider" and "The Diamond Master" will be in ten chapters.

:: "The Check-Up" ::

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who consider it "Fair"; the third, the number who consider it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who consider it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

Celebrate Anniversary of W. S. Butterfield

All Theatres in Michigan Chain Stage Special Bills Marking His 22 Years as Showman

DURING the week of March 18, all theatres in the W. S. Butterfield circuit in Michigan offered patrons special Anniversary programs in celebration of the 22nd anniversary of Col. W. S. Butterfield, who organized the chain, comprising 75 theatres in 30 cities in the Wolverine State, in the theatre business.

Butterfield, like the majority of those who have reached leadership in show business, began his career as a boy in a theatre at Columbus, O., where he worked first as a program boy. Promotions lead from that to jobs as usher, doorman and finally to assistant treasurer. Later Butterfield took a road job as advance agent. In those days vaudeville was just coming into popularity and establishing itself as standard entertainment form.

A wide experience traveling the route and discharging the manifold duties which fell to his lot in this work, along with a desire to be on his own, determined Butterfield to get his own theatre and expand his operations to the establishment of a circuit for vaudeville acts. He has confined his theatre activities to Michigan because he has felt that that state afforded him the opportunity for all the expansion he desired, for it was his desire from the start to operate a business of only such extent that he could personally supervise it, according to an interview written for the Grand Rapids Herald by Elmer Walters, until recently manager of Power's theatre there and now manager of the Palace theatre in Flint. Walters, in the course of the interview, quotes Col. Butterfield as follows:

Personal Supervision

"I knew, for one thing, the Wolverine State could give me all I would care to handle. Then I presume, what appealed also to me was the desirability of spreading a large business that I could personally oversee. I have been able to visit as many as eight of my cities in one day. This I could not hope to do, at least before the arrival of commercial airplanes, were my interests too widely scattered.

"Another reason perhaps was the early necessity to give to vaudeville acts 'easy jump' bookings. When popular-priced vaudeville was started by me in Michigan the matter of fancy salaries to vaudeville artists was yet to come. Before the introduction of motion pictures as a full program or as a part of any vaudeville program, such present-day stars as Marilyn Miller, who, then but a child, was in vaudeville with her parents and two sisters, received the dignified salary of $200 per week for five people. From this sum they were obliged to transport themselves and pay their living expenses.

"Ben Turpin, the high-salaried motion picture comic, did a knockabout specialty falling from tables and chairs stacked high enough to reach the stage borders. Turpin's contract called for $35 weekly.

"Early in the game I was not alone in the thought that motion pictures was a fad that would gradually disappear from lack of patronage after the novelty had worn off. Specializing as I did in vaudeville for two years before the arrival of pictures, I was at first quite unwilling to submit to 'overnight' picture popularity until the erection of picture theatres in my territory proved strong opposition. According to records the Butterfield Circuit was one of the first circuits to combine pictures and vaudeville.

"Realizing that I am indebted immeasurably for my success to people living in Michigan and that its people are appreciative of luxurious comfort when they wish to attend the theatre, my last few years have been devoted to the promotion and erection of commodious playhouses with goodly capacities for cities of their size."

Managers Institute Offers Extension Course

The Moving Picture Theatre Managers Institute, New York City, has announced an extension course in theatre management, similar to the resident school course and available to theatre managers and student managers for home study.

The extension course, prepared by the Institute from the texts used in the resident school has been submitted to the New York State Department of Education and has been approved.

An announcement concerning the new department of the Institute, states that the extension course covers the entire training in theatre management which is given at the resident classes. D. Baltimore, director of the Moving Picture Theatre Managers Institute, declares that the new department was created in response to a demand which has manifested itself since the opening of the Institute for a study available for those now connected with theatres who desire to retain their present employment.

Former Capitol Organist Now at New York Plaza

The Plaza theatre, Madison Avenue and 59th Street New York, has engaged Dr. Melchiore Mauro-Cottone as Chief Organist. The doctor until recently presided at the console of the Capitol theatre and is well known to radio fans and concert audiences throughout the country. He is a past President of the Society of Theatre Organists.

Showmanship Briefs

IF opportunity only strikes once, then it "struck' for Manager L. E. Davidson in exploiting "Partners in Crime" at the Capitol Theatre, Sioux City, Ia. A 1200-dollar safe robbery was pulled in the city just prior to play dates and on the following morning the very same safe was parked in front of the theatre. Of course, there was a card on the safe and contained the following copy, "Yes, this is Bishop's safe that was robbed Tuesday night. If there were any laughs in it, you can blame the robbery on Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton—They'll steal all the laughs in town!"

WHEN Manager J. P. Pitner, of the handsome new Capitol Theatre, Nelson, B. C., failed to receive delivery of the feature "Now We're in the Air" for its local run, no less than 14 local artists were rounded up by him for a more or less impromptu vaudeville program which made a decided hit. The house orchestra was also augmented to 10 pieces for the occasion. The emergency bill aroused much enthusiasm from the large audience and no person wanted his money back.

EVERY once in a while we hear about a co-operative page ad or possibly a double truck, but Manager Chas. H. Amos goes a couple of steps farther in lining up enough merchants for seven co-operative full-page ads—one page to appear each week. "The Noose" was the first attraction to profit by this stunt—playing at the Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn.

THE advertising department of F & R are determined to have the new Minnesota Theatre in Minneapolis considered as a northwest institution, and to that end they are advertising it in more than 500 newspapers in the district. An extensive campaign has been arranged for radiocasting and various other methods are being taken to bring the theatre to the attention of the entire northwest.

MANAGER E. R. ROGERS got a wide range of publicity for "Legion of the Condemned" by tying in with the News, who were sponsoring a model airplane league in conjunction with the Airplane Model League of America. "Legion of the Condemned" was the feature film attraction at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn.

ATMOSPHERIC fronts are being used by Manager George Rotsky, of the big Palace Theatre, Montreal, with excellent results. For "The Circus" there was a tent effect over the marquee and entrance, while a ring master and clown were stationed in the lobby to add to the atmosphere.

ONE of the unique features inaugurated by Kunsky Theatres Corp., is a weekly house organ called "The Capitolite," in which Capitol Theatre employes are given an opportunity to comment on activities directed by that organization. Inside the cover are found several mimeographed sheets pertaining to service, maintenance, production and better business methods, as well as personals. The publication is issued weekly through the cooperation of the service staff.

Mechanical Display Shows "Big City" Action

Manager Fred O. Slenker had displays in both his outside and inside lobbies to advertise "The Big City" at the Columbia Theatre, Davenport, Ia.

The outside lobby contained a four-sided peep box in which the inside showed a cut out figure of Chaney with gun in hand taken from the three-sheet.

A mechanical display was used in the inner lobby which consisted of a street scene back drop showing a street intersection. At the intersection was a cut-out building, entrance, etc. By means of an endless belt, and motor, the figure of a gunman carrying a figure of a girl in his arms was made to travel down the street and into the building entrance.

Patrons Vote for Beauties Shown in Screen Slides

Manager John V. Ward of the Queen's Theatre, Niagara Falls, Ontario, has discovered that it is not necessary to have people on the stage for a special contest.

On a recent Thursday evening, Thursday being the poor night of the week, Manager Ward conducted a Children's Beauty Contest in which slides of 45 local children were thrown upon the screen. Prizes were offered for babies, children from one to five years and from five to 10 years, the applause of the audience determining the winners. The attendance was so great that many people were turned away.

Felix Song to Be Exploited With Cartoon Reels

"Felix the Cat," screen cartoon character of wide fame and many accomplishments has added another achievement to the record by serving as the inspiration for a new work from Tin Pan Alley. The new production is a song called "Felix the Cat" and has been published by the Sam Fox Publishing Co.

In conjunction with Educational, releaser of the Felix reels, the song publisher will exploit the song in conjunction with the screen cartoons.

Programs of Short Films for Juvenile Matinees

Doris Steeker, manager of the Forest Theatre, Cincinnati, is making her house a mecca for children on Saturday afternoons by dispensing with the regular programs, and showing special series of short subjects especially suitable for junior patrons. The Forest will be converted into an airdome during the summer, preliminary work having already been started.

Interpolated Songs With "Rose Marie" Showing

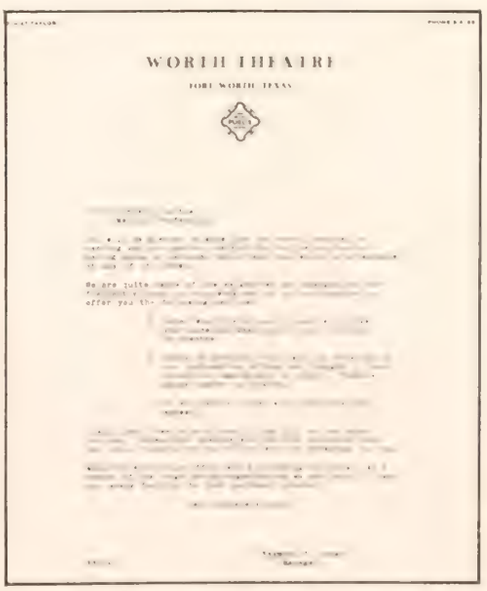
William Haynes, manager of the Allen, presented a singer with his picture "Rose Marie" with excellent effect. Instead of preparing a prologue, the singer rendered "The Indian Love Call" at proper times during the filming of the picture. The singer, of course, was in the shadow and did not obtrude her personality into the production.

Finds Printed Notice Effective as Cure for Spooning in Theatre

MANAGER A. P. DROHAN of Griffin's Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, has effectively and permanently broken up the "spooners." Noting a growing tendency on the part of young couples to cuddle up during performances, Mr. Drohan hit upon a unique "break" system. When loving patrons are now noticed by ushers, the latter pass them a card on which is printed "Kindly Change Your Position." The effect is instantaneous.

After offering the card, the usher moves away without saying a word so that nothing occurs to embarrass the young folks in the eyes of other patrons. So far, no one has resented the printed hint.

Bridge Tourney Was a Goodwill Builder for Colorado Theatre



MANAGER C. CLAIR WOODS successfully bridged the gap between friendship and patronage to closer and warmer friendship and better patronage when he staged a goodwill builder in the form of a Bridge tourney at the Colorado Theatre, Pueblo, Colo.

The Pueblo Star-Journal publicized the stunt through its columns and contributed the prizes with a grand prize to the champion player and other desirable awards going to the preliminary winners. A local stationery store gratuitously furnished pencils, cards and score pads.

Entries were made in teams of two players; and partners were not changed throughout the tournament, which started on a Monday and ended on the following Saturday.

It all depends on how many entries you have but this is how it worked out in Pueblo: Eight teams opened the affair at 2 P. M. Monday, playing four games. At 3 P. M. Eight more teams took the tables to complete the opening day's play. On Tuesday at the same hours, another 16 teams 'bid it out' for the honor of entering the second rounds on Wednesday. On Wednesday, the 16 teams that emerged successfully from the contest of spades, hearts, diamonds and clubs on the first two days, met in the second round of play at the same hours. Winners of these tests of skill met Thursday at 2 and 3 P. M. and Friday saw the playing of the semi-finals. Saturday brought the final thrilling contests starting at 3 P. M. with the losers of the semi-finals playing the preliminary game starting at 2 P. M. for third and fourth positions.

Spectators were permitted to attend all games by paying the matinee admission to the theatre while all players were admitted free. At the conclusion of the bridge games, the spectators could enter the theatre proper and enjoy the entertainment there.

WORTH THEATRE

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

Reproduced above is the letter sent to doctors by Manager Raymond B. Jones, of the Worth theatre, Fort Worth, announcing a special call service, which was described in an article published in the April Showman.

"Smart Set" Tie-up Tests Fans Knowledge of Polo

Manager Hugh J. Smart together with the Montgomery Advertiser ran a contest in the form of ten questions about polo to advertise "The Smart Set" at the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala.

Five questions together with a newspaper article written in detail about the contest, picture, theatre and play dates appeared two days in advance of play date and this was followed with another set of five questions on the following day.

The object of the contest was to answer the questions correctly. The person attaining a hundred per cent solution was given a three months' pass to the theatre; 2nd prize one month's pass, and the next [illegible] best answers each received a pair of tickets to see "The Smart Set."

Key City Reports

New York City

SEVERAL of the Broadway houses held up extremely well in view of the fact that Holy Week, one of theatredom's annual periods of depression at the box office, was in effect. As during the entire Lenten season, those theatres having out-of-the-ordinary attractions chalked up grosses approaching house records while others with weaker pictures, even 'though backed with strong exploitation, felt the lull to quite an extent.

The Paramount chose Paul Whiteman and his orchestra to offset the depression and to bolster the picture "Doomsday" (Par) and Maestro Paul came through in great shape—enough to give the big Publix house one of its best weeks. It was Paul that did the trick—not the picture. Critics rated the film a weak one.

In its second week at the Roxy "The Jazz Singer" continued to pull in patronage from all parts of the city, the East Side particularly responding to the pop prices. It was a timely booking by the Roxy management in lieu of the Jewish holidays and the film was applauded time after time. It is more than possible that the Jolson film might have filled the 6,200 seater for a third week.

Another high light of the week was Harold Lloyd's newest comedy "Speedy," which smashed all existing box office records at the Rivoli for a week-end, Paramount claiming a $400 advance over the mark set by "Sadie Thompson." Two days showing and a midnight performance almost brought a total of $20,000. "The Gaucho" went out after three weeks with a fair enough record. It had previously played nine weeks at the Liberty at top prices. The Strand with "Stand and Deliver" (Pathe) held the average for this theatre—not so good, not so bad. The Capitol with Chaney's "The Big City" did not hold to the high mark it made the first week but the average for the two weeks is entirely satisfactory.

Paramount's "Wings" continues at the Criterion as one of the street's strongest attractions and "The Trail of '98" (M-G-M) at the Astor is also apparently pointing for a record run. Since the latter's premiere business has been remarkably fine. While not doing the rush business that "Love" did at the Embasy, "Two Lovers" (U. A.) is getting along fair enough.

Fox's "Four Sons" at the Gaiety is another of the specials doing its share of business—nothing sensational but consistently fair ever since it opened. "Mother Machree" is now doing its crying at the Times Square —for how long? Fox's exploitation dep't will have to answer. The new Fox picture "The Street Angel" with Movietone came into the Globe on Monday of this week and the boys say it has box office written all over it.

The Rialto with "Legion of the Condemned" is still going along nicely but two more weeks will probably see the end of a satisfactory run. The Colony with "We Americans" is giving this house more trade than it has had in a long time. At the Central, Universal's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is almost ready to call it a run after spending about six months to pretty fair business.

The Cameo let go of "Czar Ivan the Terrible" (Amkino) after four weeks of good business. Harry Langdon's "The Chaser" followed in. "Flying Romeos" at the Hippodrome shared honors with the K-A vaudeville. The First National Murray-Sidney aviation comedy is well spoken of. At Warner's theatre, "Tenderloin" is very very fair.

Los Angeles

HIGH winds and the fact that Holy Week kept a large number of motion picture patrons away from the theatre resulted in all theatres reporting a noticeable slump in box office receipts.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin," at the Criterion, was the mecca for school children during the Easter vacation period. It has been reported that afternoon performances have been thronged by grade and high school pupils. The evening attendance was not very satisfactory. Spring vacation also brought out the children to the matinees of "The Circus" at Grauman's Chinese. The evening performances were not marked by any special record breaking attendance.

"Ramona," at the United Artists, with its popularity unabated, enters its third week. At the Carthay Circle, "Four Sons" finished its ninth and final week—leaving an average record. The Boulevard was very popular, considering the general run of theatre attendance, with "The Silver Slave," the Meglin Kiddie Revue, and Gene Morgan with his novelty numbers.

With an attendance record that will likely stand for a long time to come, "Wings" begins its thirteenth week at the Biltmore. The picture was originally brought into the Biltmore for a special run of six weeks. Greta Garbo was a hit in "The Divine Woman" at Loew's State.

"The Sporting Age" fell a little below normal. It was somewhat of a fill-in between "The Crowd" of last week and "Speedy," which opens Saturday. "The Smart Set" brought in satisfactory audiences to the Metropolitan.

Chicago

DURING the last week of Lent, business was decidedly spotty in Chicago, many houses having an exceptionally poor box office report for that period.

At the Chicago theatre, the four Marx Brothers in person headed the bill with "A Night of Mystery" as the screen feature, the combination proving popular and business being extremely satisfactory under existing conditions. "The Patent Leather Kid" closed its extended run at McVickers, attendance being slightly off, the same being true of "Chicago," which was in its last week at the Roosevelt. "The Patsy," backed by special advertising, and Paul Ash and his Gang in "A Jazz Bouquet," fared better at the Oriental and business was practically normal. "My Best Girl," at United Artists theatre, continued to hold up fairly well.

The Tivoli offered a strong attraction in George Jessel in person with "Red Hair" as its screen attraction and had a good week. "Red Hair" was also the screen attraction at the Uptown theatre, where Benny Kreuger headed the stage show, business being fair.

The Granada and Marbro theatres both offered "The Jazz Singer" with full Vitaphone accompaniment and had big weeks, the Marbro holding this picture over for a second week, for the first time in its history.

The Granada theatre will establish a new precedent next week when it brings back "The Jazz Singer" for a five-day showing, following its successful week ending April 8th. This picture, with full Vitaphone accompaniment, is reported to have broken all records at the big north side house.

Boston

DOWN town theatres report rather spotty business for the week because of the observances of various religious holidays. Receipts have been, however, better than in any previous Holy Week in the memory of the oldest managers, and follows out the entire season's splendid business.

"The Jazz Singer" completed its eight weeks' run at the two theatres, Modern and Beacon, Friday night, where it has run simultaneously for a new record for each house. "The Port of Missing Girls" will be its successor.

"Wickedness Preferred" drew well at Loew's State and had as a companion picture "40,000 Miles with Lindbergh." The presentation was the Mosconi Brothers and Tyler Mason.

"A Night of Mystery," at the Metropolitan, proved the best Holy Week offering which the Metropolitan has experienced. Gene Rodemich and his band staged a college revue which drew well from the college population home for the Easter vacations.

"Sadie Thompson," at Loew's Orpheum, was another picture which brought smiles to the box office.

The Bowdoin Square's showing of "Ben Hur" proved a wise selection and played to heavy business in spite of former showings of that film in other Boston theatres.

Other films reporting good business during the week are "Love Me and the World Is Mine" at the Scollay Square Olympia, "The Secret Hour" at the University, "The Dove" at the Lancaster, "Chicago After Midnight" at the Washington Street Olympia, "The Noose" at the Capitol and Exeter theatres, "Finders Keepers" at the Keith-Albee Boston, and "The Secret Hour" at the Fenway.

Buffalo

ALTHOUGH it was Holy Week, box office receipts at Buffalo theatres were decidedly pleasing last week. Exceedingly favorable weather and excellent bills served to draw the public. "King of Kings," in its final week of a two-weeks' return engagement, attracted normal audiences, although attendance fell off some toward the end of the week. "Sorrell and Son," at the Buffalo, with "Roman Nights" as the stage presentation, packed them in steadily all week long, except for some lightly-attended matinee performances. The Hippodrome lured the customers in in usual numbers with "Love and Learn" and a Keith-Albee vaudeville program. "Good Time Charley," the film feature at the Great Lakes, showed strong pulling power, especially toward the end of the week. The Hippodrome Choir with 35 voices, was the stage feature. "The Circus" played a return engagement, this time at the Lafayette, and proved the usual magnet, those who failed to see him in this picture recently at the Buffalo, flocking to the Lafayette, where the stage bill was headed by Harp Ensemble. "Under the Black Eagle," and Nat C. Haines headlining the vaudeville program in "Hello, Mama," proved a happy combination at Loew's State. Neighborhood houses also had a fairly good week, nearly all of them presenting strong bills.

Cleveland

LOCAL theatres last week experienced the annual Holy Week slump. While business fell off at almost all the houses, it did not go below the usual low record for this period of other years. Keith's Palace seemed to have survived with the least scars, due, probably, more to the elaborate style show staged with the co-operation of one of the leading department stores than to the feature, "The Sharp Shooters," a good program picture.

The Stillman maintained a satisfactory average, bringing a four weeks' engagement of "The Gaucho" to a close.

"Rose Marie" drew just moderately well at the Allen, where the picture was offered with song accompaniments from the play. Pola Negri on the screen in "The Secret Hour" divided whatever honors there were to be divided, at the State, with James J. Corbett, as the headline vaudeville attraction. The Park and Cameo played a simultaneous first run engagement last week of "The Devil's Skipper" to pretty good business, considering the general average run of business at all the theatres.

Reade's Hippodrome managed to pull out some nice profits with "Chicago," a picture which played the Palace a few weeks ago to tremendous business. "Come to My House," a drama of life in a big city, did only fairly well at Keith's East 105th Street theatre. The Oriental, which recently adopted a new policy of showing specials, opened that policy with "Husbands or Lovers," a German-made production featuring Emil Jannings. The results were encouraging, and the policy will be continued.

Neighborhood houses took their medicine gracefully, expecting just what they got—a poor week.

Kansas City

A STRONG lineup of pictures and cooler weather had beneficial effects upon the box offices of first run theatres in Kansas City this week. Richard Dix, in "Sporting Goods," at Loew's Midland, played to good crowds throughout the week, as did "Bringing Up Father," at the Newman

At the Mainstreet, Leatrice Joy, in "The Blue Danube," played to a fair week's attendance, while the Pantages did a big business on "Dressed to Kill." Marie Prevost, in "The Night Bride," at the Globe, also held up well during a week's engagement.

Nothing out of the ordinary routine newspaper advertising and lobby displays was attempted by any of the theatres, with the exception of a bit more lobby display at the Liberty on "Bringing Up Father," a few more cut-outs being used.

San Francisco

BOTH good and poor business conditions were reported by the first-run motion picture theatres in this city. One reason for the poor business being laid to weather conditions, as exceptional rain and wind storms were witnessed for four days. The end of the week was better than the early part.

"The Jazz Singer," held over for a seventh week showing at the Embassy Theatre, again crowded that theatre. It was estimated that almost 200,000 attended this Vitaphone house in that time. A record has been set by this picture in San Francisco, and it will be held over an eighth week.

Another picture that went over big last week was Marion Davies in "The Patsy," shown at Loew's Warfield Theatre, together with the Rube Wolf production. Weather condition kept none from visiting this house in the evenings or afternoons. Norma Talmadge in "The Dove," together with the Publix Stage Revues, well filled that theatre.

"The Enemy," shown at the California Theatre, while proving fairly popular with some war veterans, was not popular with the people as a whole, as very few, comparatively, went to see this picture the first week. War pictures are not, generally, popular here.

"Partners in Crime," shown at the St. Francis Theatre, while considered a fairly good feature comedy, was not good enough, it seemed, to induce the man or woman to leave his home on a stormy night.

The Golden Gate Theatre more than crowded its doors with the Sixth Anniversary Program shown with the feature comedy, "Stand and Deliver," and special vaudeville acts. The Union Square reported fair business with "Tongues of Scandal," "Man of Letters" and vaudeville acts.

Manager Jack Ley reported big business in the residential theatre, The Alexandria, where "Old San Francisco" was shown, and Bill Crosby reported big business in his residential house, The Coliseum Theatre, where "The Broncho Buster" and the special stage attractions were shown.

Harrisburg

A GOOD variety of attractions in the downtown houses brought quite satisfactory business to the Harrisburg theatres in the week preceding Easter. At Loew's Regent there was a bill featured by "The Latest from Paris," which pleased the patrons immensely. Added to this in the same program was the film, "40,000 Miles with Lindbergh," which, being well advertised in the newspapers, boosted the crowds.

Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton appeared on the Victoria screen in "Partners in Crime," and made a distinct hit. Harrisburg patrons declared this film is one of the funniest made by this pair, and the crowds were big throughout the week. Tom Mix, in "The Arizona Wildcat," was the feature at the Colonial, where the crowds were not quite up to par, although those who saw the film liked it.

At the State the picture feature the last half of the week was "The Girl from Chicago." The Broad Street did good business with a double bill consisting of "Your Wife and Mine" and "The Son of a Gun." The Russell also offered a double feature with considerable success. It was "White Pebbles," with Wally Wales, and "Stolen Pleasures," with Helene Chadwick.

Ottawa

THEATRES of Ottawa, Ontario, did hit a slump during Holy Week. There was no attempt on the part of Ottawa exhibitors to lay down in the matter of picture quality and patronage was fairly good during the first few days of the week. The outstanding film was "Beau Sabreur," at the Regent theatre, which was well liked despite removal of the dancing scenes by the censors.

"The Leopard Lady," at B. F. Keith's, had the fans talking.

Ottawa fans saw "The Last Laugh" at last at the Imperial theatre. It opened to tremendous business on the Saturday before Holy Week. Later in the week a new print with sub-titles was substituted for the wordless print, but, judging by comment, nothing was gained by the change. The picture had been banned in Ontario for three years because of its German origin.

"Sailors' Wives," at the Centre theatre, was popular among the sheiks and shebas. At the Columbia theatre, the regular patrons, which include many juveniles, were delighted with "Red Hot Leather," a typical Jack Hoxie feature. There was also plenty of excitement at the Rex theatre for "The Riding Rascal."

Seattle

FOR the fourth consecutive week since its opening, the Publix Seattle theatre topped all other houses in this city last week, piling up a large gross, against average or below average business for the other houses.

"Red Hair" was the screen attraction at the Seattle, and Clara Bow again demonstrated that she was probably the best drawing individual star in films that hits this city. Gross for the week around $20,000.

The Fifth Avenue theatre had a week that was quite a bit better than average—"Chicago" was the attraction. The film was widely heralded, but was not especially well liked by most patrons. Fanchon-Marco's "Circus Days Idea" on the stage was not particularly good.

"Wild Geese" at the Blue Mouse theatre was one of the week's surprise attractions, pulling very good business and getting unusually good audience and newspaper comment, despite its heavy theme. The film did a very good weeks gross, aided by a group of Vitaphone acts that were not exceptional in entertainment value. Business slightly above average.

"Ramona" was the attraction at the United Artists theatre, where business was below normal. "Soup to Nuts," as the comedy attraction, took the house by storm. A week below average, and the film was taken off.

At the Columbia, "Love Me and the World Is Mine" was the film feature. It had a fine cast and director, but failed to click. Earl Gray and His Orchestra were featured on the stage. The double bill attracted just the average business.

"Come to My House," at Pantages, was considered a good program attraction that played to fairly good houses, and "The Shield of Honor," at the Orpheum was fairly well received, but had no particular box office appeal. Business at the Orpheum is still below normal, despite the new reduced prices and grind policy.

"Outcast Souls," at the Embassy, and "Border Cavalier," at the Winter Garden, were program attractions. Neighborhood business is still off, with the exception of the Egyptian, which still does big business with its new Vitaphone and Movietone installations.

Tampa

HOLY Week cut into the box office takings this week and business shows up "off" in all houses, with the possible exception of the Victory, which led the field in receipts, and was the only house to report business up to the average. The attraction that brought the business for the Victory was "Tenderloin" and four extra good Vitaphone presentations. Manager Peck had so many requests from people who refrain from amusements this week to hold this show over that he has arranged to keep the entire program for a second week's run.

The Tampa, for the first time since it opened, featured the stage presentation above the screen for the first half of the week. The stage attraction was "Florida," with a local girl featured. The screen attraction was "A Girl in Every Port." The show opened Sunday to very good business, but the following three days were just fair. "The Smart Set" was the feature of the last half, and it did fairly good.

The Strand had two pretty good days with "The Flying Romeos," but "Freckles," used the next three, failed to draw, or did "Woman Wise" start anything the last two.

The Franklin also had an under average week. "The Chaser" and "The Devil's Skipper" were the first run attractions used, and "Old Ironsides" was brought back for a second showing.

Cincinnati

BUSINESS in the downtown houses went considerably above the average last week. As all the more prominent houses in the business section are under control of the Keith-Albee-Libson-Harris-Heidingsfeld interests, and the takings, therefore, all reverting to the same place, the average is usually satisfactory in any case where one or more of the houses should happen to experience a slump during any particular period.

"The Jazz Singer," with Vitaphone at the Capitol, drew as heavily in its second week as it did during the first week's run. The picture is being held over for a third and what is said to be the final week.

"The Legion of the Condemned" at Keith's also enjoyed a very good week, and will be held over for another seven days.

The Albee displayed "Silk Legs," together with the Pavley-Oukrainsky Ballet as the stage attraction, and piled up a nice gross for the week. "Chauve Souris" was presented at one of the legitimate houses at the same time, and whether the Albee booking was intentional or accidental, the house cashed in to a considerable extent on the Russian spectacle, which was playing in the city.

The Lyric, in the final week of "The Enemy," did a satisfactory volume, both for the last week, as well as the entire engagement. "The Whip Woman," at the Walnut, drew fairly well, while the Strand, with "Something Always Happens," had quite a satisfactory week.

The Family, playing split week with "Why Sailors Go Wrong," first half and "Nameless Men" last half, did an average business with both films.

Des Moines

"ROSE MARIE" played at the Des Moines theatre here for a very nice week's business. It was shown with "Forty Thousand Miles with Lindbergh," and this also was a fine drawing card. At the Capitol theatre, "The Showdown" was the feature, and this picture was given a good hand. The stage show was "Night Life," which had several good hits in it and was a rollicking collection of fun. At the Strand theatre, playing for the half week, "The Patsy" did business out of the ordinary. It was exceptionally well liked. "The Circus Rookies" finished out the week and did nicely.

The vacation at school offset the Holy Week slump at the theatres in Des Moines, but exhibitors over the state have been making bitter complaint of the run of trade at this season.

Minneapolis

WITH the exception of the new Minnesota Theatre, which did another tremendous business the second week of its existence, Minneapolis exhibitors didn't have a great deal to be thankful for during Holy Week. The Minnesota was still stealing the crowds away from all the theatres, the Chicago Grand Opera Company came into town to play to some 30,000 persons in the new auditorium, and one evening was spoiled for the movie theatres by an unseasonable snowstorm which assumed the proportions of a blizzard at times. The combination of all these circumstances made Holy Week just a bit drabber than usual, theatrically speaking.

Greta Garbo in "The Divine Woman," was at the Minnesota, while the Publix unit, "Blue Plate," staged by John Murray Anderson, was the stage attraction. The theatre did a whale of a business, although it is only fair to say that the newness of the theatre, rather than the picture attraction, was responsible for the crowds. Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer" came back to the State for a repeat engagement, but did a very mediocre business. This was the first time in eight years that the State had ever played a repeat engagement. Two months ago "The Jazz Singer" broke all house attendance records at the State, but last week it just couldn't get going.

The Strand showed the mystery picture, "The Chinese Parrot," and the Garrick showed "The Blue Danube," but neither picture was big enough to overcome the odds of the week. "Under the Tonto Rim" was at the Lyric, and Pantages bolstered its vaudeville program with "Topsy and Eva," starring the Duncan Sisters. The Hennepin-Orpheum's picture was "Chicago After Midnight." It is no secret that the new Minnesota has affected the attendance at both these vaudeville houses rather badly, although probably only temporarily.

Some of the neighborhood houses reported good business. The Lagoon, for example, made a fine showing with "Seventh Heaven," and so did the Loring. Other neighborhood attractions included such pictures as "Garden of Allah," "Sadie Thompson," and "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE theatres have just finished a record week—a record for the season's slowest business. The close of the Lenten season was one reason and the inclement weather was another. "The Gaucho" at the Garden started fairly well, but business dropped off appreciably at the end of the week. The picture is being held over for another week. The Wisconsin offered "The Heart of a Follies Girl" to very slim houses. "Finders Keepers" failed to stimulate any unusual business at the Alhambra. "Quality Street" was accorded fair patronage at the Merrill. "Tillie's Puntcured Romance" brought rather meager patronage to the Strand. "Stand and Deliver" was the photoplay feature at the Orpheum where business was also very quiet.

Neighborhood theatres found things rather dull throughout the entire week. The Colonial offered "Surrender," and business was fair. "The Cohens and the Kellys in Paris" brought moderate patronage to the Venetian. "Helen of Troy" was rather popular at the Oriental. "The Divine Woman" at the Garfield, Uptown, Tower and Modjeska found business dull. The National and Milwaukee theatres did moderately well with "The Student Prince."

Dallas

RECEIPTS at the Dallas theatres for the past week were only fair and the weather received most of the blame.

At the Majestic, "Ladies Must Dress" brought a fair gross for the week, but failed to get the average Majestic crowds. "The Smart Set," at the Melba, did not get the good opening "West Point" enjoyed, but business built up and receipts for the week were good. "40,000 Miles with Lindbergh" was included in the program and was responsible for a nice share of the business, due to the good publicity behind it.

At the Palace, "Rose Marie" opened slow, but after the first three days of fair business they were packed for the rest of the week. The presentation offered was a Body Beautiful Revue, composed of 16 local girls, and was well received.

"On Your Toes" failed to get the business for the Capitol, and gross for the week was low. "The City Gone Wild" and "Burning Daylight" proved to be good box office attractions for the Old Mill, and business was above average for the week.

"The Gaucho" and "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" brought the Arcadia another good week, with Fairbanks getting most of the business.

Baltimore

BUSINESS for Holy Week in the Monumental City, beginning April 2, went to a very low ebb, with only Loew's Century doing what might be called a very good business for that week with Norma Shearer's latest starring vehicle, "The Latest From Paris," and a stage presentation act entitled See-Saw, with Ted Claire and other headliners.

As a special Holy Week attraction "The White Sister," starring Lillian Gish, was shown in its reissued form at Loew's Valencia, and on the same program was "40,000 Miles With Lindbergh." Business throughout the week was fairly good.

A surprise greeted the management of the Little Theatre, operated by the Motion Picture Guild, Inc., for "Light of Asia," the production made in East India under the direction of Himansu Rai, went over good throughout the week. It was decided to hold the picture for another week.

"Across the Atlantic," starring Monte Blue with Edna Murphy, went across good at Warner's Metropolitan during the first three days, but proved only fair during the latter three days.

At the Keith-Albee New Garden Theatre, "A High School Hero," featuring Sally Phipps, with high-class Keith-Albee acts, went over fairly well.

Business was considered poor at all the other first-run houses, including Keith's Hippodrome, with "Almost Human," featuring Vera Reynolds, and Keith-Albee family time vaudeville; at the New Theatre, with "Blue Danube," featuring Leatrice Joy, Joseph Schildkraut and Nils Asther, and a vaudeville act; at the Palace, where "The Rose of Kildare," featuring Pat O'Malley, was shown with burlesque; at the Stanley, where "Finders Keepers," starring Laura La Plante, was shown on the same bill with a presentation act called Broadway Revels, with Boyd Senter, and at the Rivoli, where "The Texas Steer," starring Will Rogers, was on the bill.

Salt Lake City

THEATRE reports of the down town houses are slightly above the average this week at several of the houses. The weather turned suddenly cold for a few days, encouraging inside entertainment, and some special productions also proved to be good.

"Burning Daylight" played to capacity houses at the Capitol theatre, in conjunction with the special stage attraction featuring "Eight Famous Victor Artists."

"The Crowd" was personally endorsed by Manager Grant Pemberton, of the Pantages theatre, during the forerunning week on the screen, as being a picture of unusual entertainment value and has drawn big crowds all week to this house, which also offers a vaudeville program.

Charlie Chaplin, in "The Circus," is having an extended run at the Paramount Empress and the house has been packed to overflowing during the matinee performances.

Will Rogers, in "A Texas Steer," did an average good business at the Victory theatre, according to reports, as did Reginald Denny, in "On Your Toes," at the American.

"Skyscraper" proved to be very successful, according to reports from the Gem theatre this week, capacity houses being the rule. The second showing of "Sorrell and Son" drew good business to the Rialto, it is reported.

The Mission Neighborhood house showed "Man, Woman and Sin" the fore part of the week with a good share of success. Mary Pickford, in "My Best Girl," was a very satisfactory drawing card at the Towers, being shown as a third run, and "What Price Glory" filled the house generally at the Forum as a third run.

Albany

THE combination of Holy Week and mid-summer weather proved too great an obstacle for the majority of motion picture theatres in Albany to surmount during the past week. In all probability the week will be known as the worst week from the box office standpoint, during the entire year. The weather was of the sort that reminded one of June or July, rather than April, bringing out the automobiles by the thousands, and leaving the theatres stranded for business. At the Mark Strand, "The Jazz Singer," playing a return engagement, did not do any business to brag about. The same might be said of the Leland, in Albany, running "The Tragedy of Youth." The Clinton Square theatre in Albany fared no better with its first run double features consisting of "The Tired Business Man" and "The Haunted Ship." The Mark Ritz in Albany did fairly well with "Chicago after Midnight," and this picture would have probably packed the house any other week. Harmanus Bleecker Hall, which has been playing to capacity audiences with a combination of pictures and vaudeville, also felt the effects of the weather and the closing week of the Lenten season. The neighborhood houses in Albany reported business as being bad during the week. In the neighboring city of Troy there was little business done by the motion picture theatre either in the business center of the city or among the neighborhood houses. The Lincoln used "Nameless Men" to poor business, while "Two Arabian Knights" played to mediocre business at the Troy theatre.

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatre box-offices this week waved a banner flag on the whole. The Capitol, with "Thanks for the Buggy Ride," plus a good vaudeville bill, drew crowded houses throughout the week. Next door, at Keith's Georgia, "Something Always Happens" filled the seats easily every day.

Down the street, at the Howard, "The Garden of Eden" drew praise and a teeming coffer, and Loew's Grand, with "Quality Street," did not suffer, although business was on the slump.

The Rialto, showing "So This Is Love," held the scales about even with preceding weeks. "If I Were Single," following "The Jazz Singer" at the Metropolitan, ran steadily good throughout. Three short numbers, "The Lash" particularly, drew loud hands.

The Tudor had fair business from "Desert Dust," "Captain's Courage," and "Splitting the Breeze," while the New Alamo played to good houses with a second run bill for the week.

Baltimore

(Week of March 26)

TWO first-run theatres here did exceptionally well during the week beginning Monday, March 26, despite the Lenten season, "The Night of Mystery," starring Adolphe Menjou, going over strong at the Stanley with a stage presentation, headed by Boyd Senter, including the six Brown Brothers and other attractions.

At Loew's Valencia Emil Jannings continued to pull them in strong with "The Last Command" during the second week of its engagement there. Business at that house was considered excellent and this was thought due in part to the advertisements which were placed in every foreign newspaper in Baltimore.

At Keith's Hippodrome "Wallflowers," featuring Jean Arthur and Hugh Trevor, went over good with five acts of Keith-Albee family time vaudeville on the same bill.

Business at Warners' Metropolitan, with "The Fortune Hunter," starring Syd Chaplin, with Vitaphone musical accompaniment, proved a fairly good drawing card there with other Vitaphone attractions also.

Bebe Daniels' latest starring vehicle "Feel My Pulse" proved only a fairly good business getter at Loew's Century with a stage presentation called Broadway Blues with Ted Claire as master of ceremonies.

Fairly good business was done by "Streets of Shanghai" at the Keith-Albee New Garden with Sessue Hayakawa on the same bill with other Keith-Albee high class acts.

The Neuman production "Power of Darkness" held forth at the Little theatre, operated by the Motion Picture Guild, Inc., and business started off fair but wound up very good during the latter part of the week. The good patronage during the last part of the week was attributed to a splendid review given in the Evening Sun by Q. E. D.

"The Devil's Skipper, with Belle Bennett, proved only a fair drawing card at the Rivoli with the program including Maryland Revels on the stage with Willy Smith and his jazz instrumentalists and other feature artists.

"Pajamas," starring Olive Borden, went over good at the New theatre with a stage presentation and at the Palace where burlesque is given in addition to pictures, "A Blonde for a Night," starring Marie Prevost, proved a fairly good attraction there.

Opinions on Pictures

Nameless Men

Good Melodrama

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

POSSESSING a good story emblazoned with the good old fireworks, a melodramatic type of entertainment is presented here. There is excellence in the direction and in the portrayals by Eddie Gribbon, Ray Hallor and Antonio Moreno. It is a well balanced yarn, with a variety of things to keep it alert and snappy.

The gentry of the underworld and of the penitentiaries—these are the birds whose fortunes are disclosed in the story. A detective goes among them, becomes a fellow prisoner, so that he can learn their secret. He falls in with a big, easy-going crook with the result that they are soon side-kicks. All these pleasantries continue until it becomes imminent for the detective to save the brother of the girl he loves. The other crooks are anxious to elicit valuable information out of him and are succeeding. This is the time for the detective to break his bonds, set a police squadron in pursuit and engage the villains in personal combat.

The way it is directed and acted gives it a smack and punch which raises it above the average melodrama.

Drawing Power: A good prospect for houses catering to lovers of melodrama. Exploitation Angles: Stress the underworld angle, its prison scenes. They rob a bank, which scene makes good attraction getter.

THEME: Melodrama of the underworld in which a detective saves the young brother of the girl he loves from becoming enmeshed in a life of crime. To do this he is forced to kill a crook, a buddy with whom he has palled to get the evidence on him. But he finds solace in the girl.

Produced and Distributed by Tiffany-Stahl. Released, January, 1928. Length, 5,708 feet. The Cast: Antonio Moreno, Claire Windsor, Ray Hallor, Eddie Gribbon, Sally Rand, Steppin Fetchit, Carolynne Snowden, Charles Clary. Story by E. Morton Hough. Continuity by Jack Natteford. Director, Christy Cabanne.

The Chorus Kid

Average Film Fare

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE ex-chorine gets her man in this truly make-believe story of a jazz mamma and a doting millionaire who thinks she's a dear. Having become well-to-do with some oil stock, the gal decides to drop a few years from her scroll, enter a school for girls and experience some of the childhood she had missed. The result of her little venture is that she becomes intimate with the daughter of the millionaire, meets him at his home and falls in love.

Standing in their way and watching the romance with a malignant eye is a scheming widow with a strong yen to get the millionaire her self. When he learns of the girl's deception of course he feels hurt, but is willing to forgive all. There is a further romance between the daughter of the millionaire and the widow's son. Almost everyone seems to have found happiness except the widow, who finds herself baffled in the end.

This tale of so slight timber has been produced in a satisfactory fashion. Excitement is not overwhelmingly in it, by any means. There are some good bits of acting from the cast. Of them all, Hedda Hopper is the best as the poor widow. Howard Bretherton directed smoothly while building up to his climax—a scene in a hunting lodge where the final cards are disclosed.

Drawing Power: Fair. Suitable for neighborhood, second-run theatres and the like. Exploitation Angles: See the press book.

THEME: Heart drama of a chorus girl's venture to capture her childhood. She finds instead love and romance in the form of a wealthy man, whose daughter is her chum at school.

Produced by Gotham. Distributed by Lumas. Released, April 10, 1928. Length, 6,200 feet. The Cast: Virginia Browne Faire, Bryant Washburn, Thelma Hill, Tom O'Brien, John Batten, Sheldon Lewis. Story by Howard Rockey. Director, Howard Bretherton.

Flying Romeos

Good Aviation Comedy

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

PURSUIT of aviation engages the attention of the well-known comedy team of Murray and Sidney in this new First National release, and we firmly believe your audience is in for some real, deep-throated laughs. Two sequences stand out as the best; the first, in which the pair go through their evolutions in the air, being by far the most interesting. Director LeRoy also deserves credit for his efforts here. The other most worthy of mention has to do with a barber shop where a large number of comedy fans have seen this pair before. But some new tonsorial stuff has been injected, and past experience has only made these two the more experienced in this particular profession. The rest of the cast do their work in good style.

Charlie and George are the proprietors of the tonsorial firm of Cohen and Co-han. Both are in love with their manicurist, who has a fondness for aviators. One appears in the shop for a hair cut and they vent their ill feeling by giving him a bad hair cut. To further their love affairs, the partners take up aviation, become panicky in school, escape in underwear, and take refuge inside a 'plane in a nearby aviation field. They unwittingly put the plane in motion when mechanics are testing the motor, and, as this machine is equipped with a new gyroscope, marvelous stunts are performed. The owner insists that they fly his 'plane on a trans-Pacific flight—which they attempt with the aid of a crazy pilot. The latter is absolutely balmy and but for parachutes our heroes would have been in for their last moments. On their safe return the manicurist has married another aviator.

Drawing Power: A sure thing for all houses catering to a comedy-loving audience. Exploitation Angles: Take advantage of high interest in aviation by putting over any reasonable airplane ballyhoo or stunt. Press book describes several. Toy 'planes and parachutes may be procured at small cost. Play up names of stars.

THEME: Irish-Jewish barber shop partners come to grief attempting to gain love of manicurist who prefers aviators to tonsorial artists.

Produced and Distributed by First National. Length, 6,172 feet. Released, February 26, 1928. The Cast: Charlie Murray, George Sidney, Fritzi Ridgway, Lester Bernard, Duke Martin, Jas. Bradbury, Jr., and Belle Mitchell. Directed by Mervyn LeRoy and Produced by E. M. Asher.

Speedy

Fast-Gaited Fun Vehicle for Lloyd

(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

THE title of the picture tells the whole story of this new Harold Lloyd comedy, graced with a metropolitan background which should make it especially appealing in the cities and towns of the country and endowed with a showmanship quality, typical of this star's product, in the form of a timely interest in its introduction of baseball and amusement park sequences.

Lloyd and his gag men (or if you will "comedy constructors") have devised a formidable array of comic incidents, lined them up into a compact parade and set the whole business off at a pace possibly equalled but probably not surpassed in any previous screen work. It is the speediest picture this reporter has memory of seeing, and the laughs are nicely timed to match the pace of the action. In casting his lot in that direction, naturally the comedian places less accent on characterization than has been his tendency in the several works which preceded "Speedy." But there is no danger in relying solely upon incident when the material is so sure-fire and the execution thereof is in the keeping of an actor so well versed in his craft and so shrewd in his understanding of audience reaction as is Mr. Lloyd.

There is a plot. It concerns itself with an old-timer, the owner of the last remaining horse-car line in New York. The franchise is valuable to a big traction company, and they buy out old man Dillon at a handsome figure, thanks to Speedy's uproarious and break-neck dash to send the old car over its route before the expiration of the 24 hours specified in the franchise. Speedy is in love with Dillon's daughter and he ultimately makes good, though his previous record has been a new job a day. The incident opens with Speedy's crack exhibition of "soda jerking" behind the fountain at a confectionery. Next he tries a job as a taxi driver, which culminates with as wild a ride through Broadway traffic as ever has been executed. Speedy's fare on this trip is Babe Ruth, and the famed Sultan of Swat registers a clever performance in expressing shock and fear as he is whirled to the Yankee Stadium to be in time for the game. A trip to Coney Island is productive of a series of really funny incidents. The dash of the old horse-car despite obstacles set up by the "interests" is a riot of fun.

Ann Christy, a very competent comedienne, is the heroine. And Miss Christy makes a pretty and pleasing one. Bert Woodruff does an excellent job of the old horse-car driver, and Brooks Benedict completes the cast receiving credits in the program. Ted Wilde directed "Speedy."

"Speedy" is for all ages and all types of fans. It will score as a laugh hit everywhere.

Drawing Power: Very good. Exploitation Angles: A very elaborate campaign book has been prepared on this release, which offers excellent opportunities for advance teaser advertising of the ballyhoo, poster and newspaper style, and many opportunities for local tie-ups with taxi companies, street car companies, amusement resorts, moving van companies, book stores, etc.

THEME: A comedy dealing with a likeable chap who is just a little too fast for the type of jobs he can get, and he gets a new one every day. But he makes good for the girl he loves by saving her father his horse-car franchise and finally sells it over to a big traction company.

Produced by The Harold Lloyd Corporation. Distributed by Paramount. Released, April, 1928. Length, 7,960 feet. The Cast: Harold Lloyd, Ann Christy, Bert Woodruff, Brooks Benedict. Director, Ted Wilde.

Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath

Full of Spontaneous Laughs

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

WHILE there may be considerable lacking in this story, and while its construction may not be of the best, you can't take away from it the fact that it contains a large number of laughs of the spontaneous variety, and the probably is what it was made for. The press sheets describe it as a comedy-drama. As for the drama angle, the least said about it the better, but it does abound in laughs.

Strange as it may seem, a comparative unknown in comedy roles all but steals the picture. In fact, he just about does steal it from everyone but Dorothy Mackaill, whose clever mannerisms and genuine attractiveness, serve to put an audience in just the proper mood to appreciate the heavier comedy of "Big Boy" Quinn Williams, who has the role of a tough structural iron worker. "Big Boy" in the past has confined his screen activities largely to Westerns. He is a first rate comedian and following this effort will doubtless get much work along this line. Jack Mulhall is his usual self, with his same attractive smile and winning personality, but he is overshadowed just a little by this "Big Boy" Williams.

The picture drags badly in spots, and is entirely too long in getting to the Turkish bath sequences. There is only the thread of an inconsequential story and a somewhat disconnected one, but laughs have been injected at such regular intervals that one can overlook the shortcomings of the story.

Drawing Power: The comedy is good and with the popularity of the leading players it should go well in any house. Exploitation Angles: The title will readily offer a number of ideas, which however, should be used only along comedy lines. The dieting and massage sequences will offer others.

THEME: Structural iron worker becomes enamoured of girl vendor of prepared lunches, whose parents become wealthy and move uptown. He pursues her, accompanied by his roughneck boy friend. All of them become involved in a number of humorous situations which culminate in a Turkish bath following a raid on an indecent dance hall, and eventually the iron worker wins the girl.

Produced and Distributed by First National. Released, April 1, 1928. Length, 6,592 feet. The Cast: Dorothy Mackaill, Jack Mulhall, James Finlayson, Sylvia Ashton, Harvey Clark, Reed Howes, "Big Boy" Quinn Williams. From the stage play by Charlton Andrews and Avery Hopwood. Directed by Edward Cline. Produced by Edward Small.

Skyscraper

A Mediocre Feature

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE is not much that can be recommended in this De Mille studio production. Aside from the fact that it provides a laugh at intervals all too far apart it is all very filmsy and mediocre. The slim story drags more or less wearily along, and never does get much of anywhere in particular except for the usual happy ending. It is not convincingly done, and the climaxes consequently mean little or nothing in the action of the picture.

William Boyd is the star, with Alan Hale as his buddy, the pair of them being structural iron workers, and Sue Carol in the role of the leading lady. With the poor material assigned to them none will increase his or her popularity.

Boyd effects the rescue of the jobless girl when a steel girder being hoisted atop a skyscraper breaks from its fastenings. And there starts a romance. She stumbles into a job as chorus girl, and he stumbles off a girder and becomes desperately crippled. He refuses to mend because he thinks she does not care for him, and she knows nothing of his injury as it happens after the show has left town. He is chided by his pal for not showing more guts and secretly effects his own complete recovery in time to flatten his buddy, who has chided him on, and to win the girl.

The action, what there is of it, is laid partly on a half completed New York skyscraper and partly in a New York pleasure park, with a number of sequences atop a theatre roof, where it seems, the girls do much of their cavorting during lapses in rehearsals.

Drawing Power: It is doubtful if there is either enough story or comedy to get this one by to advantage. Exploitation Angles: The splendid shots from atop the skyscraper; the backstage and pleasure park sequences and the popularity of the star.

THEME: Structural iron worker saves the life of a jobless girl, woos her when she becomes a chorus girl, is injured in a fall from a building and, after some differences between them are patched up, their marriage follows.

Produced by De Mille Studios. Distributed by Pathe. Released, April 9, 1928. Length, 7,040 feet. The Cast: William Boyd, Alan Hale, Sue Carol, Alberta Vaughn. Director, Howard Higgin.

Why Sailors Go Wrong

Fair Story with a Few Laughs

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

WHILE [illegible] the veriest slapstick nature of its comedy, the fact remains that it will probably click with the majority of motion picture patrons who are not inclined to delve too deeply in the search for [illegible], but are willing to take things as they come.

Sammy Cohen and Ted McNamara provide most of the fun and aside from their antics there is really nothing much to it. Nick Stuart and Sally Phipps, who are also among the featured players add little to the value of the picture principally because their roles are more or less inconsequential and they have only poor material with which to display their talents.

Sammy and Ted are a combination bound to provoke mirth and their all too ridiculous exploits here will doubtless be appreciated despite poor direction which prolongs many of the sequences to an impossible point in an effort to promote laughs. There are, however, many humorous situations and quite a number of gags that will meet with the entire approval of the cash customers. Sammy as a taxi driver and Mac as a hansom cab driver are not as funny as they have been on other occasions, but it would seem they are quite funny enough to put even this picture over.

Drawing Power: The abundance of slapstick comedy and the reputations of the two comedians, despite a poor story, will probably bring healthy box-office returns. Exploitation Angles: The pair of comedians and the humorous comedy situations will offer a number of exploitation angles, several good ones of which are outlined in the press book.

THEME: Taxi driver and hansom driver enlist their services for generous remuneration to a young lover who would join his sweetheart on a yachting cruise, but who is being detained through the intrigue of the villain. The comedy pair win their reward and the young couple achieve their aim, but only after many humorous antics and a few of a thrilling nature.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Released March 25, 1928. Length, 5,112 feet. The Cast: Sammy Cohen, Ted Mc Namara, Sally Phipps, Nick Stuart, Carl Miller, E. H. Calvert, Jack Pennick. Director, Henry Lehrman. Story by William Conselman and Frank O'Connor. Scenario by Randall H. Cave.

"Off Balance"

(Educational—One Reel)

THE [illegible] to render service in this Cameo starring Monty Collins, who appears as a doting hubby and a light-fingered gent. Funny complications develop when the hubby is chased by Marcella Arnold, the feminine accomplice of the crook. Also with the crook do things grow uncomfortable, as he is mistaken by the wife for hubby while trying to rifle the latter's apartment. To add to the confusion is a burly yegg [illegible] interest in Marcella.

It is a humorous reel, one that will click. Lucille Hutton is the young wife and Jack Lipson the tough egg. Jules White directed.—RAYMOND GANLY

"Sailor George"
(Universal—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

GEORGE is a ridiculous gob who goes through a lot of silly antics in this two-reeler which is neither better nor worse than the usual run of the type. He loses interest in the navy with the arrival of Marion, who comes for a tour of the ship. George becomes enamoured of her, as does the ensign, and each tries personally to conduct her over the ship.

The ensign palms off Miss Quince on George and takes possession of the fair one, but George outsmarts him and recovers the girl, with whom he makes an engagement for the following day, when he will have shore leave. They are about to start out on a gay time the next day when they run into the ensign again and he orders George back to the ship.

George meantime has secured his discharge papers but has misplaced them. He makes a hurried getaway and pretending to be a soda-jerker, gets a job in a drugstore, where his services prove most unsatisfactory and disastrous to the wearing apparel of a number of customers who are smeared with sodas and ice drinks of various descriptions. George is kicked out, recovers his missing papers and then suddenly visualizing the responsibilities of married life decides it would hardly be worth it.

There is nothing new in the way of gags in the picture and the humor is of the stereotyped order. There is a laugh here and there.

"Money! Money! Money!"
(Universal—One Reel)

ALL of the trouble in this one-reeler of the Snappy Comedy series starts through the absentmindedness of Harold Highbrow, star reporter of the hick town paper, who is entrusted by his employer to deposit the days receipts in the bank, and who, instead, drops them into the hat of a supposed blind man.

The blind man clearly sees the mistake and tries to make a quick getaway but he bumps into Harold's girl and her friend and the three go down in a heap as Harold approaches and recovers the cash. Meantime the office charwoman learns the bank is closed and starts a rumor that it has failed. There is an immediate rush for the bank as Harold starts to get out an extra on the failure. Later in the day the bank cashier returns and announces the bank had been closed in observance of National Prune Day.

Bennie Hall and Lydia Yeamans Titus are the featured players and they offer the usual brand of rough and tumble comedy that will probably be appreciated in the neighborhood houses.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Felix the Cat in Polly-Tics"
(Educational—One Reel)

YOU would think a studio turning out a continuous supply of cartoons would come across with an average release once in a while, at least, but not so with the Pat Sullivanites, who control the destinies of Felix. This subject is an excellent example of how bright, entertaining and nicely presented an animated cartoon can be.

In it Felix finds a home and proceeds to boss the other pets. How they try to oust him, led by the irascible polly is the story.—RAYMOND GANLY.

AN abundance of very familiar material has been assembled for this so-called Western featurette with the youthful Newton House as the hero. It is all interesting enough despite the hackneyed plot. This young Billy Newton is very friendly with the Indian Apache Joe, whose young horses Billy is engaged in breaking.

The youth lives with his married brother and the latter's wife near the Indian reservation. Frank, Billy's brother is on unfriendly terms with Bob Dane, a no-good character of the neighborhood. Dane heads a band of cattle rustlers and to get even with Frank steals the Indian's horses and places two of the most valuable in Frank's corral.

There is nothing for the sheriff to do but place Frank and Billy under arrest, but Billy, through a ruse makes his getaway and runs down the Dane gang in possession of the balance of the horses. The youth gets the upper hand on them and keeps the entire band covered until the arrival of the sheriff's posse.

SNOOKUMS plays havoc aboard ship in this latest of the Newlyweds series, which features Addie McPhail, Jack Bartlett and Sunny McKeen. The youngster, as winsome as ever is responsible for most of the comedy with which the picture abounds.

Mrs. Newlywed becomes alarmed over the condition of her husband and insists upon him visiting a doctor, who prescribes a sea trip alone. But Mr. Newlywed hasn't the heart to go alone so he takes the family with him. Snookums in an entirely new environment finds a wide fieleld for his mischief and throws the ship into a complete state of consternation.

About the time the sea gets good and rough Snookums emerges from the galley with a knuckle of ham and sends the loungers in a scurry for the rail. Tiring of this he discovers the fire bell and sounding a lengthy warning causes the life boats to be lowered and throws the boat into a panic.

As soon as composure is again restored the youngster wanders into the pilot house, attaches a rope to the pilot's ankle and the other end to a packing case balanced over the hold. A lurch of the ship sends the packing case and the pilot into the hold and Snookums takes possession, while the passengers get one of the wildest rides they have ever experienced. There is a general rush of ship officers to the pilot house and there they find Snookums peacefully sleeping at the wheel. There is a lot of good fun in the picture, which will be appreciated in any but the largest houses.

THE scene of Lupino Lane's new comedy is a little Spanish town, Bullonia, by name. Swashbuckling their way through the various sequences are caballeros, dashing senoritas, toreadors, and the necessary bull. It is a background not generally seen in a short comedy. But although the costumes and all the rest may give this number an unusual flavor, the gags and comedy weeds they have planted will not cause any laughter of the quaky kind.

Yes, that's the fault here. The comedy is not boisterous and really funny as an ordinary soul would expect seeing that Lane is the star, and knowing his possibilities. It has a languid air, which is too bad. True, Lane exhibits several tricks with his bolo and has to do a tango with a rough lady. But when all the gags have been paraded you can readily see that few of them can lay claim to sprightliness or originality.

It's a fairly good comedy attraction for any house, and it has several laughs. But what we want to emphasize is that any comedy with Lane starring should be decidedly better.

Plans are on foot to build a picture house in Shaker Heights at the intersection of Kinsman and Lee roads. Cleveland Heights, a next door neighbor to Shaker Heights, does not permit Sunday movies. Canada

WHEN the Quebec Legislature passed the law recently prohibiting children under 16 years of age from attending any theatre with or without adults, the provision was made that moving pictures could be shown in schools and convents for actual pupils.

It has already been found, however, that practically no pictures are available for the schools or convents because of theatre bookings. In other words, the film exchanges have no pictures which can be loaned or rented the educational institutions and the Government is said to be in a quandary already. The natural result is that there are no film subjects of current value for children anywhere in the Province. Parents are also raising objection to the law because they cannot go to a show and leave their children at home.

The titled picture was shown for the balance of the week. The advance advertising referred to the fact that "The Last Laugh" was a feature without sub-titles. Then, without warning, the picture was changed to one with sub-titles. Attendance during the first half of the week was greater than during the last half. Incidentally, this feature was kept out of Ontario for three years because of the Provincial Government's ban on German films which was raised a few months ago.

Freitas, the missing man, was was picked recently from 40,000 contestants as winner of the sixth prize in the Paramount-Photoplay magazine idea contest. Having failed to put his address on the manuscript, he was lost track of, as the envelope in which the script was mailed had been thrown away months before the judges decision.

LOUISVILLE'S newest theatre, the Uptown, Eastern Parkway and Bardstown Roads, will open Saturday night. A discussion arose as to the ownership of the picture, Cohen declared, resulting in Xydias coming to his office, where an argument ensued and Xydias had Cohen carried to the police headquarters where he was detained for more than an hour. Cohen claimed $10,000 damages for this mistreatment. With the conclusion of a two days' hearing, the jury decided that Xydias had not injured Cohen and he was freed from payment of damages. Des Moines

Park D. Agnew, who made a heap of friends when he served as booker and assistant office manager for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer office in Des Moines, will return to the exchange office after an absence of a year, coming in his capacity of traveling booker for the main office. Mr. Agnew left the Des Moines office to take up this work last May. He comes to Des Moines from Omaha.

Double headers were played in the bowling tournament last week and First National and Paramount came out still in a tie. First National won two out of three games from Pathe and the same score from Paramount. Universal lost six games, three to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and three to F. B. O. Everyone was most modest in their reports of the games last week with Paramount and First National each conceding the lead to one another and with Universal and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in polite dispute for last place. In spite of the fact that D. G. West of the Metro-Goldwyn team scored the best that he has yet made with a nice 200, the team did not have a previous record high enough to insure them in a place in first money. Anyway, there are about a dozen more games to be played before this thing is settled. And the match with Omaha has not been definitely set.

Vernon from Mr. Sterns, who had the theatre for a short time after his purchase from L. D. Hendricks. Mr. West will keep a manager in charge of the theatre at Mt. Vernon.

The lad was found peacefully sleeping on a cot in an anteroom, where he had been left by his daddy when the theatre was opened up again by Mr. Musselman at the request of the frantic father.

The American theatre at Muscatine, owned by Harmon Nemec, is not one of the houses which was included in the sale by Universal to the Midland Circuit of Kansas City. The Grand theatre at Muscatine was the only Midland house included in this transaction.

Projection

Optics, Electricity, Practical Ideas & Advice

Inquiries and Comments

Take Your Education in Small Doses

MOTION picture projectionists throughout the country are now under a virtual educational bombardment which seems to come from every direction of the compass. It appears that everybody is out to educate the projectionist—whether he likes it or whether he doesn't.

Trade journals, projectionist publications, union schools and non-union schools have suddenly sprung into existence and over night, have taken up the cudgel for the sole purpose, apparently, of making this hitherto neglected and little known fraternity swallow large doses of knowledge—and like it.

Some of these enterprises are commendable in that they are actuated by an honest and sincere desire on the part of their promoters, to render to the projectionist fraternity a real service by disseminating useful information of a practical nature so that their members may eventually command more respect—and a more appropriate financial return from the exhibitors.

Of the others, it can only be said that they are tainted with a commercial aspect for their principal object appears to be that of rolling up a comfortable financial return for their sponsors.

Whatever the object, whether selfish or altruistic, the effects of these various educational endeavors are visible in a certain restlessness among projectionists in general, some of whom are taking it upon themselves to step out from the ranks and reach for the knowledge which they feel to be rightly theirs and necessary to them in their every day work.

The Top of the Ladder

Ever increasing numbers of projectionists are applying for membership to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers with the idea in mind that once membership in this Society has been obtained they will have reached the pinnacle of knowledge in addition to being able to claim a certain distinction between themselves and the ordinary run of projectionists.

The idea, in its general form, may be perfectly all right and a quite logical one for the projection fraternity to entertain in that it establishes a goal, or a mark, toward which they may aim and it is useful as an inspiration to assist in the acquirement of knowledge essential to success. A number of the applicants, however, are unfortunately under the impression that by merely putting in an application and then paying thirty dollars, to cover the cost of the entrance fee and the first year's dues, they can immediately raise themselves from the projectionists ranks to a parity with recognized professional men, practically all of whom have spent years in preparing themselves educationally for their life's work.

Even though these applicants were accepted, they would be unable to take advantage of the educational benefits which the Society has to offer through its meetings and printed transactions for the reason that they would not have obtained the knowledge and perspective which results from an orderly and logical procession up the ladder. No man can make broad jumps without remaining in ignorance of what lies in between the jumping points and sooner or later he will reach the point where it will be necessary for him to retrace his steps in order to learn what was missed in his earlier rapid progress.

It is far better to cover the ground slowly and thoroughly so that the knowledge acquired today may be used to digest the knowledge which will be presented tomorrow.

The ability to exchange ideas is the direct result of the preliminary work men had to do long before they ever thought of applying for membership to the Society. They are in the Society not so much for the information which they receive but more for the reason that they are able to make valuable contributions concerning the practical end of projection.

Some of the Intermediate Steps

It may be logically asked what the intermediate steps are between the projectionist ranks and membership in the Society.

Certainly the first one is a thorough knowledge of the mechanical requirements of projection which is obtained by acquiring projection room experience in an intelligent manner. In other words, complete knowledge of the trade of motion picture projection. We use the word "trade" deliberately because the mere act of projecting pictures and performing the routine work incidental to the projection room is simply that and nothing else.

The second step is the accumulation of theoretical knowledge obtained by a wide reading and study of projection problems, as found in the trade press and the available books on the subject.

The third step is an active continuous participation in union educational meetings, where such are available. This is for the purpose of keeping in intimate touch with developments which directly affect the every day work of the projectionist, and for the purpose of obtaining detailed knowledge of manufacturers equipment even though the particular equipment is not being used by the projectionist.

And the fourth step is membership in the American Projection Society. This is probably most important of all.

Memembership in the American Projection Society is essential for a number of reasons. In the first place, its printed proceedings are the official organ of the projectionist's craft. Its publication now contains a wide variety of original information on all phases of projection which is of direct benefit to the projectionist and which should assist him materially in his everyday work.

The Society is recognized by practically all equipment manufacturers as the logical forum from which their respective equipments may be explained and demonstrated to the Society's members for their better handling of the equipment.

Most important of all—the American Projection Society is not conducted for personal gain on the part of any of its officers since its object is the purely altruistic one of obtaining greater respect for the motion picture projectionist so that he (the projectionist) can in turn feel a greater responsibility and thus be inspired to give the most that is in him.

Upon this feeling of responsibility rests the future of the projectionist since the union can only protect him from unfair infringements on the part of his employer.

The American Projection Society is to the projectionist what the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is to the general theatre industry.

Any projectionist who fails to support the former cannot possibly possess those qualities which will make him a desirable candidate for the latter.

And let it be said that financial reward for pursuing such an educational program will follow of its own accord.

Chinese Theatre in Phila. Attracts Attention

Exhibitors from all parts of the city and surrounding territory are visiting the new Lindy Theatre, 69th St. and Elmwood Ave., Philadelphia, the newest addition to the Equity Theatre Corporation's circuit, and have been loud in their praise of its beauty of design and up to date equipment. The new theatre is arousing particular interest because it is the first house in the city to be designed in the Chinese style of architecture and furnishing.

The exterior is of terra cotta and in honor of its name, a sign bearing a monoplane similar to that used by Lindbergh on his flight is mounted over the entrance of the theatre. The furnishings and decorations of the theatre are Chinese throughout, black, gold and red predominating in the color scheme. The design of the ceiling is made up of dragons and the organ chambers present the appearance of Chinese pagodas. A Chinese effect has been attained in the lighting system by the use of Chinese lanterns made of perforated iron and brass. The drinking fountains are of tile with an oriental peaked roof also of tile. The booth equipment includes two modern projectors. Color effect machines and a specially controlled screen designed to minimize eye strain.

W. H. Lee was the architect who designed the Lindy and the George Kessler Contracting Company was responsible for the construction of the house. Equity Theatres Corporation, the owner, was organized last year and already numbers thirty-five houses in this territory. It is regarded as one of the coming theatre groups of the section.

Acker & Lucas Open New Florida Theatre

W. R. Pedreick, builder of the new Etta theatre at Ocala, has given that Florida city a playhouse that will compare favorably with those in cities several times the size. The building, both in exterior and interior, follows the semi-Spanish type and is of concrete and tile construction. There are two floors, the main floor seating 650 and the balcony 250. These 900 seats are all of the spring cushion type.

The heating and cooling of the house is regulated by the Muller system. The organ is a Special Style E Wurlitzer. Jimmy Knight, of Jacksonville, handles this instrument.

Although the house was intended for pictures, a stage was provided so road attractions could be handled, and ample space was provided for the proper showing and the comfort of the players. The stage is 60 feet in the clear from wall to wall, with a depth of 34 feet. The picture sheet, hung at the back of the stage, is a "Dalite" and measures 15 by 20 feet.

The projection room, built of concrete at the back of the balcony, is large, being 20 feet wide by 10 feet deep and the same height, well lighted and ventilated. The machines are the DeLuxe Motiograph with reflecting arcs. The booth is in charge of Oakley Busler, of Tampa, who installed the equipment.

The house has been leased by Acker and Lucas, both old-timers in the theatrical business. Lester Lucas has a record of 15 years as a professional, nearly eight of which he was with the Coburn Minstrels. Bert Acker also has a stage record of many years and will be remembered by many through the South through his service as leading man with the Hazel Burgess Players. He was known professionally as Bert Leigh. The house has been very successful since it opened a few weeks ago and with the able management and high class shows it is giving the people of Ocala, it will no doubt continue.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy"—First National, Metropolitan Theatre, Boston

Herald: "A treat, a joy and a pleasure. Intelligence is evident from the beginning to the end of this film, along with a nice sense of humor. If one may timidly venture that the film is better than the book, one does. Maria Corda is a lovely Helen. Her husband, Alexander Korda, directed, and if he is responsible, as most directors are responsible, may we have more of his work."

Traveler: "The whole thing is amusing, entertaining satire. Presented by First National in their most lavish and extravagant vein. The titles are wisecracks from the 1927-28 season. Maria Corda is the intriguing beauty of Professor Erskine's novel. A splendid cast assists. Alexander Korda, husband of Maria, directed, demonstrating that he knows how to handle his wife better than her screen husband."

Advertiser: "A very free and exceedingly entertaining film transcription of John Erskine's "Private Life of Helen of Troy.' A brilliant tour-de-force. Alexander Korda, capital Hungarian director, had the entire affair in charge and produced some of the most beautiful backgrounds ever seen on the screen. He is also responsible for magnificently staged scenes. For Trojan Helen, the films have chosen Maria Corda, probably, the best choice that the cinematic world affords. She boasts beauty; certainly she acts well. The tale itself is riotous, the scenes immensely clever. A smart, sophisticated tale, well barbed with satire, set on the shadow stage deftly and wondrously well. Infinitely amusing all the time, a polished photoplay made by and for intelligent people."

American: "'Helen of Troy' is all to the merry. As a motion picture entertainment it is undoubtedly a good time. Photographically, it is a huge success. The new panchromatic process has been used with splendid effect. Maria Corda as the siren Helen gives by far the best performance. This is the same sumptuous lady who so vividly ornamented 'Moon of Israel.' Its photography and its leading lady are the highlights—both well worth a trip to the theatre."

Globe: "Delightful humor pervades the entire production of 'The Private Life of Helen of Troy' and the classics are burlesqued for more than an hour and a quarter of fun. It is something new in the way of pictures. The sets are as large and magnificent as though the picture were truly meant to be 'an epic of the Trojan war.' Yet the whole film is the most delicious fun. Maria Corda is exquisite as Helen. She looks like a poem and she is absolutely right for the part. One can't imagine another actress who could take the role with a tithe of humor and beauty of this newcomer to Hollywood."

Post: "The settings and costumes are all of the B. C. vintage but the titles have been jazzed up in modern slang, and these are responsible for the laughs, making an amusing and diverting piece."

Transcript: "In detail it is lavish and diverting. Miss Corda's Helen is assuredly the most resplendent and Mr. Lewis Stone's Menelaos the most adept of the portraits. No one wears over many clothes—a detail which seems to please all factions in the audience at the Metropolitan."

"A Texas Steer"—First National, Strand Theatre, Milwaukee

Sentinel: "Highly amusing and laugh-provoking. If you enjoy the Rogers brand of humor, you're sure to like this picture, for Will wrote all titles. Whole venture becomes a perfect riot of nonsense."

Journal: "Bright little film with plenty of funny spots and many broad digs. Comedy skilfully handled. Rogers walks through film wreathed in smiles. Audience leaves same way."

News: "Rogers always has supplied me with generous amount of laughs. . . . If first half drags a bit, last certainly makes up for it."

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy"—First National, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis

News: "Satire of delectable quality. Film handled in a spectacular manner, with many magnificent sets and beautiful photographic effects."

Times: "Corking good slapstick entertainment of high quality. Modernized burlesque. Some of smartest fun revealed upon screen. From scenic and lighting standpoint, 'Helen' is a marvel. Some of scenes are real art; beautiful, every one of them. You will have a grand and glorious mental time seeing 'Helen of Troy.'"

Star: "A story in picture. Not a moral—but a story. Fans should certainly chuckle over titles. If they do not grin, then it is a case for doctor. Picture should rank as one of season's best."

Preordained

"— the final result of the motion picture on the screen was preordained from the day that Edison got his first sample of Eastman film."*

That was in 1889. And today the film that made motion pictures practical is the film that makes the most of the cinematographer's art and carries all the quality through to the screen—Eastman Film.

Dear Sirs:

When I entered the office this morning, my operator handed me AMUSEMENTS, indicating copy of the Paramount ad on the front cover. "That's just exactly what you've told me a hundred times," was his remark.

Yes, I guess I've told him that more than a hundred times. It also reminds me that I have managed nine theatres in the past 15 years, eight of which were losing money when given me. All eight were made successful and the ninth more successful than it had been--but I always had Paramount pictures. Without them I am positive the story would have been different

I cannot make you a better wish than that your future be as great as your past!

Exhibitors Herald and Moving Picture World says:

"Now is the time for the alert theatre owner to begin to cash in on the particularly high value of the Short Feature as an attraction for summer patronage.

"The so-called legitimate stage changes its programs decidedly when summer arrives. The light, happy type of play then comes into its own.

"Why should not the same be true in the motion picture theatre to the extent of making more attractive the program in which the Short Feature holds an increasingly important role?"

May Be Pay Days

May days may be pay days — if your program is in harmony with the spirit of spring.

The world wants to shed some of the serious pursuits and heavy entertainments of winter with its red flannels—and be happy. That's what started the first Maypole dance.

Your patrons may not all want to do a jig around a big stick, but they do want to be light-hearted and gay. They want to laugh. And if you want spring days and summer days to be pay days for you, you'll help them do it.

One of Educational's clever, peppy two-reel comedies is worth more to you than a grand opera these days. Educational Pictures are in the spirit of spring. They'll make May days pay days — for you.

SPEAKS!

"I STAND ON MY RECORD"

When I produced "Stella Dallas," I gave you a big, powerful production. It proved an artistic and box-office triumph for you.

Now with "Two Lovers," my latest production, I am presenting the final and biggest Ronald Colman-Vilma Banky picture. It is big to the eye—big in its love climaxes—big in production value—and big at the box-office.

I had great faith in "Stella Dallas" when I road-showed it at the Apollo Theatre, New York, for twenty-six weeks. Results to you, proved my judgment was well founded.

At present I have even greater faith in "Two Lovers" which I am road-showing at the Embassy Theatre, New York, at $2 top.

If judged only on my past picture record as an independent producer, you have every box-office reason to bank on "Two Lovers" now.

"Two Lovers" is Fred Niblo's greatest directorial achievement.

Ronald Colman never had a greater or more magnetic role. Vilma Banky was never so alluring and so exquisite.

"Two Lovers" in which they appear together for the last time is a stupendously thrilling and romantic drama. Hereafter Colman and Banky are stars in their own right.

I recommend "Two Lovers" to you for your bank balance. I recommend it to your audiences for supreme entertainment.

I am willing to let my past picture record guide you in booking "Two Lovers," the greatest Colman and Banky production.

A Big Change Needed

"Not Next Year, But Right Now"

By William A. Johnston

"WHAT this business needs is a complete change, not next year but right now.

"It needs good-will. It needs unionizing of strength within the business. Good-will is badly needed".

We take these words from a letter written to us by Leon Jarodsky, of the Jarodsky Enterprises, Paris, Ill. They form the theme of an extended analysis of the industry by an exhibitor who has grown up with the business and who looks at the whole matter from the viewpoint of the public as he has found it.

Mr. Jarodsky's letter is quite long, but it is one of the ablest of the many exhibitor communications we have recently received, and we quote it pretty much in full text:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

It is with considerable surprise and still with a great deal of interest that I read your editorial of April 7 which contained the analysis from M. H. Bryer of the Akron Theatre Company, Akron, Ohio.

I quite agree in some respects with Mr. Bryer. On the other hand, one of his statements, particularly one of the meaty statements of his analysis, would spell disaster to our business because as you might say it is running from the ridiculous to the sublime, either of which is not what we need in this business. Incidentally, the writer has been engaged or rather connected with, buying, advertising, and the operation of a motion picture theatre since coming out of knee breeches and I am now 37. I have expected just such a thing as we are now facing for a number of years. I can remember as a mere lad when I stood one day in the office of Pop Plugh's Anti-Trust Film Exchange on West Lake Street in Chicago, when it dawned on me that some day the motion picture distributor would build up a wonderful thing and then finally destroy it.

In reference to Mr. Bryer's statement that people want melodrama and sob stuff and they don't seem to be in a laughing mood this year—Mr. Bryer is absolutely wrong as he can be in the latter part of his statement. I'll o. k. the melodrama and I'll o. k. a part of the laughing mood proposition but I will not o. k. the sob stuff. People do not go to the theatre to cry. This is positive. They go to the theatre to be entertained. After all, the movie fan is merely a human being. They want to follow the theme of the story in which they can place themselves and the thrills, tenseness and excitement of the story, hold them and grip them, carry them through the plot, put themselves in the shoes of the artists on the screen. What does the young married matron want? Lavish society dramas with plenty of thrills to carry her through and hold her attention and with excitement of good drama interwoven. What does the young lady with her Beau Brummel want? What she wants is the flapper type of story, flaming with thrills and excitement and flaming scenes of city life and dances and jazz parties. What do both of the above parties want? Love stories with a great deal of dramatic interest to hold them. What is the alternative with which we can entertain this class of trade? The mystery drama, thrilling and exciting, but, mind you, with comedy relief, to create spontaneous relief from the excitement.

What does the family trade want? As Mr. Bryer says, melodrama—but they want it thrilling and they want it with comedy relief. I quite agree with Mr. Bryer in this one thing and I think he is perfectly right. However, I do not think he has given enough thought to his statements. Comedy Drama with comedy as a basis for the story is ruinous and disastrous to our business. On the other hand, this business doesn't want to lose sight of the fact that comedy is one of the most valuable assets which we have in the show business but people do not want comedy as the basis of a story. They want it in two reel lengths or they want it in the form of vaudeville on the stage.

The following types of pictures are disastrous and the aftermath following them is very noticeable: sob stuff, costume pictures, (generally—there are some exceptions), epics and educational pictures as we call them and pictures with sad endings. The argument that we need sad pictures with sad endings because they make the patron appreciate the other type of picture, is like saying that a man must eat a sour apple to thoroughly appreciate a sweet one. Last, but not least, among the business depressors is the straight comedy drama.

People want to be thrilled, excited and held with tensity to the story which they follow in the motion picture theatre. But they positively do not want the above types of pictures and don't forget that comedy relief is exceptionally valuable but only as relief.

We have in this business destroyed the dyed-in-the-wool movie fan's patronage by trying to cater to Harold Lloyd fans, Chaplin fans and the vaudeville fan through comedy drama. I quite agree with Mr. Bryer that the pictures this year are not as good as they have been in past years, that they are thin, not particularly trashy but poor stories, not meaning anything. The producer came around this year demanding higher rentals and he particularly abused the special in that he marked off from his regular product, not selling you the block, many, many, pictures which he called specials and which were sold at two, three and even four times as much as the product averaged. These pictures have almost invariably and with one or two exceptions turned out to be just ordinary program product and not any too good at that and we have paid extra prices for them and gone out and tried to sell them with flaming posters and huge newspaper space with the result that the public is losing confidence in our business.

This business is losing its repeat value. People are not coming back for more pictures. Even the weak little entertainments in the high school auditorium are attracting movie fans away from the motion picture theatre.

What this business needs is a complete change not next year but right now. It needs good will, it needs reductions in the number of pictures produced. It needs unionizing of strength within the business, the making of good pictures by good directors with good stars and with good casts from good stories instead of taking a good story and making it weak by using a weak cast, taking good stars and ruining them with poor stories, by permitting a good director to waste his time on unknown quantities and try to stretch out the available product making three or four pictures out of the same stuff from which one picture should have been made.

Good will is badly needed and they need to quit promoting brick and mortar because eventually the producer must pay for every dollar's worth of brick and mortar put into a theatre. When they break one of the two exhibitors, which always happens in towns of our size, they must suffer the loss on the brick and mortar because the exhibitor cannot finance that loss and the public is being drained to the full extent and they cannot finance that loss.

My answer in regard to the talking picture, whether it be Vitaphone or any other type of instrument which reproduces voice or music, is that the fascination of the motion picture lies in its silence. Good music helps to enhance and increase the thought, accentuate the emotions of the motion picture patron. However, I will never believe that the mechanical reproduction of synchronized music or voice will ever be of any greater value to the industry more than just the novelty of it at the beginning.

Hoping something constructive may come out of our business after the turbulent times which we are going through, I am with best wishes,

Yours very truly,

An Exhibitor's Views on Trade Paper Advertising

Mr. W. A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.
Dear Mr. Johnston:-

I'm inclined to think that the cutting down on trade journal advertising by the producers has had a great effect on exhibitors whose enthusiasm is aroused and who are sold on a picture that is well advertised.

Putting copy into your paper that would help us exhibitors sell the picture would certainly not be amiss, but why not continue good ads to sell us? We have to sell the public and we can't do it by cutting out our advertising; besides, we need to be "sold" first on the picture.

Probably the best thing producers could do to put over their pictures, would be to run copy which would sell exhibitors as well as give them much help in the exploitation of pictures. This would react to great advantage, I believe. Certainly it wouldn't hurt to give this idea a trial.

With best wishes and kindest regards,
Yours very truly,

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

A SURVEY made by Film Daily and published by it under copyright shows that 729 features are promised for next season from 36 companies. This compares with 638 for the current season. Some companies have not yet announced their plans, and taking these into consideration, Film Daily believes the total may reach between 750 and 765 for the season of 1928-9.

It is pointed out, quite correctly, that announced plans for product do not always materialize in fact. Schedules are cut down, or in some cases, increased according to conditions.

It is obvious, however, that the new season will see just as many pictures as, if not more than, the present one.

As we have pointed out many times, the industry is still on the basis of numbers of pictures, more or less arbitrarily fixed by the producer, instead of being on the sounder basis of consumer demand.

Consumer demand means, of course, what the public wants and will absorb; the determining factor should be the exhibitor. This is not a new idea, but it is just as true as ever.

IN numerous editorials we have gone into a discussion of this important subject, and perhaps there is no need to stress it here, except to say that until the public is enabled to pull pictures from the industry, instead of the industry's pushing pictures onto the public, the correct economic basis will not have been reached.

On the other hand, it is also obvious that there will be plenty of product next season. As to quality, only the actual verdict of the box-office will decide.

"HOW the Studio Spends a Dollar to Make a Picture" is the title of an interesting chart in the report of Adolph Zukor to Paramount stockholders for the year ending December 31 last. The division is as follows:

Actors' salaries, 30c; supervision and general expenses, 19c; directors and cameramen, 13c; stories and scenarios, 13c; new sets, 12c; raw film stock, 5c; locations, 4c; costumes, 4c.

ANOTHER chart in the Paramount report deals with foreign gross rentals for 1927, exclusive of Canada, and analyzed by languages. It is shown that 48.55% of the total comes from English-speaking countries. The Spanish countries are second with 15.37%, and the others follow: German, 9.59%; Portuguese, 6.79%; French, 6.40%; Italian, 3.56%; Scandinavian, 3.51%; Japanese, 3.09%; Dutch, 1.55%; Chinese, .80%; Russian, .51% and Turkish .19%.

The Paramount foreign business showed an increase in 1927 of about 13% over 1926, the best previous year.

Domestic business in 1927 was 14% ahead of 1926 and 11% ahead of 1925, the best previous year.

Mr. Zukor's report also states that the number of holders of the corporation's common stock increased from 1991 in 1924, 2736 in 1925, 4060 in 1926, to 5011 in 1927.

A DISPATCH from our Paris correspondent, L. C. Moen, commenting on the modifications proposed by the French Commission regarding the quota law, says:

"Although the visit of Will Hays has not as yet resulted in any definite modification of the French film law, and although the commission has made no formal announcement, it was learned this week from thoroughly reliable sources close to the commission itself, that the body entrusted with the administration of the law had practically decided, before Mr. Hays' arrival, to modify its provisions for the current year only to permit American companies to bring into France for this year 50, or perhaps 40, per cent of the number of films which they imported last year, entirely outside of the quota itself.

"Then, at the end of the film year, the commission will review the efforts of the various American companies to encourage French production, and will lay their plans for the following year accordingly.

"Visas are now being issued to French films, but are not yet available for foreign films, American among them. This will force a crisis shortly, as release dates must be met, although all negotiations with French companies to obtain visas through the acquisition of French films for American release were dropped by the American companies when Mr. Hays sailed, pending the outcome of his visit."

THE Reverend J. J. Turnipseed, pastor of the Antioch Primitive Baptist church of Powderly, Ala., in a statement issued April 5th and published in the Birmingham, Ala., Post, declares that the action of the Pastors' Union in opposing Sunday motion pictures for Birmingham is indefensible.

"I deeply deplore the action of the Pastors' Union in opposing Sunday motion pictures and in trying to coerce all the members of their churches to follow their dictates," he said.

In his statement Rev. Turnipseed asks why amusements for pay, such as East Lake Park, Cascade Plunge, Fair Park, and the municipal golf courses are allowed to operate on Sunday without a protest from the Pastors' Union.

"And yet the Pastors' Union makes violent objections to Sunday moving pictures, which, in my opinion, would be a real benefit to moral conditions of this city," the minister said.

Rev. Turnipseed, who lives at 1731 Jefferson Avenue, West End., is a qualified voter of Birmingham and has resided there for eight years, during which time he has been pastor of the same Baptist church in Powderly. He is a native of Alabama, and for the past twenty years has been preaching at various Baptist churches throughout the state.

"Every man should be allowed to spend Sunday according to the dictates of his own conscience so long as he does not interfere with the life, liberty and pursuit of happiness of other people," the pastor continued.

"The best way to judge as to what will happen if we have Sunday movies, is to investigate as to the results in other cities. I am very familiar with the situation in Montgomery, having been born near that city and having visited the state capitol many times. The results of Sunday movies in that city are shown by the fact that Montgomery has the largest church attendance in proportion to population of any city in the United States, and it also has the largest Bible class in the country in a city of less than 500,000 population. It is interesting to know that the teacher of this class is a firm believer in and a strong advocate of Sunday movies."

Paramount Again Makes Denial of Commission's Charges

Amended "Report of Compliance" Declares Company Never a Party to Any Conspiracy; "All or None" Policy Also Denied

PARAMOUNT Famous Lasky Corporation has filed its "report of compliance" with the Federal Trade Commission in reply to the commission's order of July 9, 1927, and later modified, directing the company to discontinue "certain unfair methods of competition." In its reply Paramount denies any conspiracy to restrain trade and that unfair practices have obtained in the block booking system of distribution. The report of compliance was filed April 14.

The report disclaims any attempt to distribute the company product in contravention of law and cites specific reasons for practices now being pursued. This amended report of compliance differs but little from the report of the company filed last November, according to Commissioner Abram F. Myers, who presided over the Trade Practice held in New York last October. The first report was disapproved by the commission and the company was given until April 15 to file an amended report.

Paramount contends that its policy of selling is conducted along legitimate lines that obtain in the wholesale distribution of any other product, and that it believes its booking policy is in conformity with the views of the commission as to the manner in which films are to be sold.

In denying that it has been a party to any conspiracy for the purpose of lessening or restraining competition or trade, the corporation asserts that it has built, bought, leased or otherwise acquired no theatres for the purpose of intimidating or coercing exhibitors to lease its product.

Explaining the method followed in the leasing of films, the brief declares that "respondents are not leasing or offering to lease for exhibition in the theatre or theatres, motion picture films in a block or group of two or more films at a designated lump sum price for the entire block or group only and requiring the exhibitor to lease all such films or be permitted to release none."

It is the impression in Washington that the answer of Paramount paves the way for a suit against the company by the Trade Commission. In the event of such suit it is thought the commission would confine its case to efforts to outlaw block booking. At the trade practice conference Commissioner Myers stated that the commission does not consider distributor theatre operation an unfair practice, so long as no unlawful acts in connection with it are committed.

It is said that an intensive study of the Paramount reply will be made by the legal staff of the commission preliminary to consideration of the document by the commissioners, with a view to deciding whether the method of booking films outlined by the company is a sufficient compliance with the cease and desist order.

The text of the Paramount reply is as follows:

First National Gets Sound Device

Joins Forces With Western Electric and Victor Talking Machine for Producing Synchronized Pictures

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, INC., Electrical Research Products, Inc., a subsidiary of the Western Electric Company, and the Victor Talking Machine Company, have joined forces to produce motion pictures synchronized with sound through what is to be called the Firnatone process, according to an announcement made by Clifford B. Hawley, President of First National.

Electrical Research Products, Inc., has granted First National Pictures a license to use its patents for sound recording and reproduction. The Victor Talking Machine Company, using its recording experts, its artists and its orchestras, will produce the synchronized scores and sound effects for the Firnatone. The Victor Talking Machine Company is the first phonograph recording company to enter the business of synchronizing sound with motion pictures.

The first Firnatone picture will be Colleen Moore in "Lilac Time," which will be shown on Broadway in June.

The question as to whether First National Pictures and the Victor Talking Machine Company will produce for Firnatone pictures in which the characters speak all their lines has not yet been decided, according to Mr. Hawley. "We own 'The Squall,' the successful stage play," he said. "We might find it worth while to make it complete in a Firnatone production, having the characters speaks the lines from the play. We may produce 'No, No, Nannette,' the musical play, with much of the original material recorded.

"Corinne Griffith's picture 'The Divine Lady" will contain a huge production of the Battle of Trafalgar, which may lend itself to recording. We own the motion picture rights to 'La Tosca,' 'The Barker,' the story of carnival life; 'Show Girl,' a backstage story of a chorus girl by J. P. McEvoy, all of which are being considered for Firnatone. As to 'La Tosca' our plans are indefinite so far.

"The Victor Talking Machine Company's association with us gives us the finest recording facilities. We will produce the pictures; they will cooperate with us regarding what can best be recorded. Their experts and the experts of the Electrical Research Products, Inc., will go to our studios in Burbank, Calif., and there make a thorough study of the Firnatone possibilities of each production. They will begin first with 'Lilac Time' with synchronized orchestration and special sound effects, which will be particularly effective in the airplane battles that are an important part of the story."

The Firnatone process records the sound on a disc which is synchronized with the machine which projects the film on the screen. All theatres equipped with Electrical Research Products' sound devices can use Firnatone records with no additional equipment, it is said.

Warner Bros. have registered a complaint against Electrical Research Products, Inc., and Western Electric Company, and will carry it to arbitration. The company charges delay in installation of talking picture equipment in theatres to be used with Vitaphone.

It is also claimed by Warners that Electrical Research is charging too much for installation, that it has been negligent in its efforts to push sale of the equipment, and that, as a result, between 300 and 400 Vitaphone short subjects and synchronized scores for over 50 features are available with a very limited outlet.

Warners named Samuel Untermeyer as their arbitration representative, while the defendants appointed Nathan Miller, former Governor of New York State. These two selected Justic Hiscock, formerly of the Court of Appeals, as the third member of the board. The hearings are under way.

Electrical Research Products, Inc., in addition to installing Vitaphone equipment in the theatres, also installs Movietone. There has been no complaint filed for the installation of Movietone.

First National Re-elects Officers and Board of Directors

AT the annual meeting of the First National Pictures, Inc., held during the week at the company headquarters in Madison Avenue, New York, all officers and directors were re-elected for the ensuing year. An advisory board was also named in addition to the officers and directors. The regular quarterly dividend was declared of 2 per cent on preferred stock, payable July 1st to stockholders of record on June 13th, as well as the regular 1¾ per cent dividend on second preferred class A stock payable July 1 to stockholders of record on that day.

The following officers were re-elected: Clifford B. Hawley, president; Robert Lieber, chairman of board; R. A. Rowland, vice-president and general manager; Samuel Spring, vice-president and treasurer; Robert W. Perkins, vice-president and secretary; Abe Sablosky, vice-president; John H. Kunsky, vice-president; Ned E. Depinet, vice-president in charge of distribution; E. Bruce Johnson, vice-president in charge of foreign distribution; Ralph W. Brown, assistant secretary; Warren C. Boothby, assistant treasurer.

Fox-F. & R. Deal All Off

Negotiations Are Ended When Financial Arrangements Are Declared Unsatisfactory

THE much rumored deal between Fox and Finkelstein & Ruben has finally fallen through. William Hamm, head of the F. & R. organization, announced this week that negotiations had been discontinued, and that F. & R. would continue to operate its 130 houses in the northwest. At the same time he made known plans for new office building which F. & R. will build this summer in Minneapolis to house its administrative forces.

Here is the complete statement issued by Finkelstein & Ruben:

"The F. & R. organization will continue the operation of more than 130 theatres in the northwest, as they have in the past, except for the joint operation of 11 theatres in St. Paul and Minneapolis in association with the Publix theatres, the largest theatre operating company in the United States.

"In carrying out their plans for entertaining people of the whole northwest, the F. & R. organization will start immediate construction of a general headquarters building in Minneapolis. The structure will be located on Sixth Street north, between Hennepin Avenue and First Avenue north. The entire home office personnel of the F. & R. company will be housed in this building.

"No other changes in the administration of the firm's business will be made. Efforts will be continued to further expand the operations of the company."

"There has been a great deal of publicity with reference to the F. & R. chain of theatres being sold to the Fox Film Company of New York," Mr. Hamm explained, in application of the statement. "Statements have been made from time to time that a deal was all closed, with the exception of a few minor details. These statements have appeared in the New York press as well as in the local papers and in trade papers.

"The position has been taken continually by the F. & R. officials, including myself, that there was nothing to be said on the closing of this deal until it was actually consummated, and that it would not be consummated until the papers were signed.

"Negotiations have been going on for a period of time and one of the prerequisites of Fox taking over the chain was the necessary financing to be provided and completed by them. The plans to finance, which have been finally submitted have not been satisfactory to us and for that reason we have discontinued negotiations.

"Our arrangement on the 11 Twin City theatres with Publix, including the new Minnesota theatre, provides that operation of these houses shall remain with the F. & R. organization. We believe that the arrangement which has been made for this joint operation will prove beneficial to ourselves and highly satisfactory to the public."

Paramount Again Denies Commission's Charges

or entered into any conspiracy for the purpose of lessening or restraining competition or restraining trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations in the business of producing and distributing such films, but they are not continuing in force, recognizing, complying with, carrying into effect or enforcing any such conspiracy, and have no intention of so doing.

II.—Respondents are not leasing or offering to lease for exhibition in a theatre or theatres motion picture films in a block or group of two or more films at a designated lump sum price for the entire block or group only and requiring the exhibitor to lease all such films or be permitted to lease none.

Respondents are not leasing or offering to lease for exhibition such motion picture films in a block or group of two or more at a designated lump sum price for the entire block or group and at separate and several prices for separate and several films or for a part thereof less than the total, in such manner that the total or lump price and the separate and several prices bear to each other such relation as to operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to select and lease for use and exhibition only such film or films of such block or group as he may desire and prefer to procure for exhibition, or as to tend to require such exhibitors to lease such entire block or group or forego the lease of any portion or portions thereof, or as substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the business of production, distribution and exhibition of motion picture films to the public, or the business of production and distribution, or of production or distribution of motion picture films for public exhibition.

Respondent Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation makes every lawful effort to sell as much as possible of its products in every territory in which motion pictures are exhibited, and as it is an essential factor of the motion picture business that the same picture can not be sold to two different exhibitors for exhibition in the same territory at the same time, said respondent in determining to whom it shall sell or lease its products gives consideration to the quantity offered to be taken by the respective potential customers.

Upon purchases of products in quantity upon a single sale the respondent grants reductions in price as compared with the prices at which the same product of the individual units, commensurate with a difference in cost to the respondent of procuring the exhibition of its products in the territory of the purchaser.

Furthermore, there are exhibitors with whom the respondents, acting wholly for reasons of its own and without consultation or agreement with any other producer or distributor, does not care to do business at all or whose business is so small in amount that said respondent does not deem the business sufficiently profitable to be accepted. Each sale of pictures to each theatre is an independent negotiation, involving numerous different factors affecting both quantity and quality of the pictures under consideration, the time of the proposed exhibition, and the character, location and number of theatres in which the proposed buyer contemplates their exhibition.

While many of said respondents' customers purchase or lease all or substantially all of said respondents' products, and while many such customers refuse to purchase any of said respondent's products, if respondent sells any of its product to any competing exhibitor, the great majority of sales by respondent upon a single negotiation are for materially less than all of the pictures at the time offered for sale or lease.

In October, 1927, at the invitation of the Federal Trade Commission, a Motion Picture Trade Practice Conference was held in New York City. It was resolved by the delegates there present that the matter of drafting a new Standard Exhibition Contract be submitted to a Contract Committee to be chosen by the delegates representing the Distributors, the Exhibitors affiliated with Distributors and the Unaffiliated Exhibitors.

Accordingly, a Committee was selected consisting of three members and three alternates chosen by and representing the Unaffiliated Exhibitors; three members and three alternates chosen by and representing the Affiliated Exhibitors and three members and three alternates chosen by and representing the Distributors. It was agreed that the three members and three alternates representing the Affiliated Exhibitors should be without vote.

After prolonged conferences held in the City of Chicago in February, 1928, a new and radically different form of Standard Exhibition Contract was unanimously agreed upon, a copy of which is attached hereto and marked Exhibit A. Particular reference is called to Articles Twentieth and Twenty-first of said contract which are as follows:

"Twentieth: If the license herein granted shall apply to an entire group of photoplays offered by the distributor to the exhibitor at one time, and not otherwise, the exhibitor shall have the right to exclude from this contract up to but not exceeding 10 per cent of the total number of such photoplays, but only if the exhibitor shall give the distributor written notice of such effect at any time not later than fourteen (14) days before the date fixed for the exhibition of any such photoplay hereunder, and if at the same time the exhibitor shall pay to the distributor one-half of the license fee payable in respect of any such photoplay. In computing such 10 per cent, fractions of less than one-half shall be disregarded. If any such photoplay shall, because of such exclusion, be hereafter licensed by the distributor for the same run as that specified in this contract, for exhibition at another theatre where such excluded photoplay would not have been exhibited if not so excluded; then one-half of the license fee (up to but not exceeding the amount paid by the exhibitor to the distributor as a condition of so excluding such photoplay) received by the distributor for such re-license shall be credited to the exhibitor by the distributor.

"If the license fee of any such photoplay so excluded is to be computed either in whole or in part upon a percentage of gross receipts of the Exhibitor's theatre, then for the purpose of computing such one-half of such license fee payable hereunder in respect of such photoplay, such gross receipts for each day that any such photoplay is licensed hereunder for exhibition thereat shall be deemed to be the average daily gross receipts of such theatre during the period of thirty (30), operating days immediately prior to such date of availability of such photoplay."

"Twenty-First: If the exhibitor shall claim that the exhibition at the theatre hereinafter specified of any photoplay licensed hereunder will be offensive to the public in the place where such theatre is located, because of racial or religious subject matter, and if the exhibitor shall give written notice to the distributor of such claim within a reasonable time prior to the date fixed for the exhibition thereof hereunder such claim shall be immediately submitted to the Board of Arbitration herein specified."

Steffes Plans Airing of Arbitration Question

W. A. STEFFES, president of the Northwest Theatre Owners Association, is urging that every theatre owner in the northwest be present at the convention of the association to be held in Minneapolis on May 1 and 2. Mr. Steffes plans to settle the question of compulsory arbitration at the convention but feels that a settlement made by a minority of exhibitors would not be acceptable to the theatre bodies involved in the question of arbitration. Mr. Steffes thinks that he has devised a scheme whereby it will be possible for the Northwest Theatre Owners Association to put a stop to the showing of films in places of amusement other than theatres. He expects to submit this idea to the convention and considers that another reason for urging as large an attendance as possible in order to secure beneficial suggestions.

Paramount Denies Charges of Commission

"If such Board of Arbitration shall specifically determine that the exhibition of such photoplay at such theatre will be offensive to said public because of racial or religious subject matter, then such photoplay shall be excepted from this contract, and not otherwise. The distributor may exhibit or license the exhibition of any photoplay so excepted when and where desired by the distributor free from all claims of the exhibitor.

"If the distributor shall be of the opinion that any photoplay licensed hereunder will be offensive because of racial or religious subject matter, to the public in the place where the exhibitor's theatre is located, the distributor shall have the right to except and exclude such photoplay from this contract, upon condition that such photoplay shall not thereafter be licensed for exhibition in such place unless such racial or religious subject matter is eliminated therefrom in which case such photoplay shall again be deemed licensed hereunder."

Attention is also called to the following provision of said contract:

"* * * No 'short subjects' or 'news reels' shall be included in any group of feature photoplays, and the licensing of 'news reels' or 'short subjects' groups shall not be made a condition of licensing the exhibition of feature photoplays or vice versa. * * * "

Following the adoption of said form of Standard Exhibition Contract, Mr. R. F. Woodhull, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who acted as chairman of the delegates representing the Unaffiliated Exhibitors at the Motion Picture Trade Practice Conference, and Mr. R. H. Cochrane, Vice-President of Universal Pictures Corporation, who was chairman of the delegates representing the Distributors at the Trade Conference, issued the following joint statement:

"We are more than pleased with the really fine work of the Contract Committee, the members of which gave unstintingly of their time at a great sacrifice of their personal interests to do a constructive piece of work for the motion picture industry at large.

"It is the belief of the Committee that the new Contract and Rules are a great improvement over those which they will supersede, beginning May 1st, 1928,—and that the new provisions and those which were omitted from the old Contract and Rules, will do much to eliminate many points of trade differences between exhibitors and distributors of motion pictures."

Respondent Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation has adopted and is using said form of Standard Exhibition Contract and is fully complying with and will continue fully to comply with its provisions.

The resolutions of the Motion Picture Trade Practice Conference creating the Contract Committee provided that after the adoption of the modified Standard Exhibition Contract it should be the purpose of the Contract Committee to have periodical consideration of the contract, to consider whether changes therein were warranted by experience.

III.—Respondents have not built, bought, leased or otherwise acquired or threatened to build, buy, lease or otherwise acquire any theatre building or buildings or theatre or theatres for the purpose and with the intent or with the effect of intimidating or coercing any exhibitor or exhibitors of motion picture films to lease or book and exhibit motion picture films produced or offered for lease or leased by said respondent.

Sapiro Outlines Views at C. of C. Dinner

Declares Right of Selection of Pictures Belongs With Exhibitors

AARON SAPIRO, president of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of New York was the principal speaker at a dinner tendered him by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in New York on the evening of April 16th, at which he outlined some of his views regarding the motion picture industry.

After telling of the serious handicap the radio has put on the exhibition phase of pictures, Sapiro said the main trouble was that the industry was dominated by the producers and that the remedy for the evil would be to give the exhibitors the right of selection of the product they are to show in their houses.

With regard to radio competition and correction of production evils, Sapiro said:

"This competition can be met in only one way. The exhibitors must not waste their time in talking and complaining. They must get together—exhibitors of all kinds—and they must see that the entertainment that they provide for the public justifies itself by interest and quality, so that the public feels that it must have more and more. This is a problem for all of the exhibitors—and through the exhibitors a problem for the producers.

"This industry is made of three primary parties, the producers, the consumers, the exhibitors. The industry is dominated by the producers today. Yet in every other form of business in the United States the trend shows that the group that has the contact with the consumer has more to say than any other branch of the industry.

"The chain grocery stores are not dominated by the manufacturers; nor are the five-and-ten-cent chain stores controlled by any producers. They have the contacts with the public. They know what the public want. They are the outlets through which the producers must reach the public and convert their product into cash.

"The exhibitor has his hand on the pulse of the public and it is for the good of the public, as well as the entire industry, that the exhibitor should have something to say about the type and quality of the pictures that he is asked to show to the public.

The following tribute was presented to Mr. Sapiro at the dinner:

"The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York bids you welcome as leader of the motion picture exhibitors, proud and honored to have your counsel; confident that your just and able leadership will solve all problems of theatremen in a way that will rebound to their security and also to the mutual welfare of all the motion picture industry and the American public."

It seems likely that this exhibitor cooperative buying movement first sponsored by the Sapiro organization in New York will be extended nationally. The trend is that way. Sapiro delegated Leo Brecher to Pittsburgh during the week and the latter addressed the Western Pennsylvania theatre owners on the subject. The president of the New organization is also making a trip to Buffalo to interest exhibitors there. The New England territory has launched a movement for organization along the same lines.

Brookhart Hopes for Senate Hearing This Year; Too Late for House

UPON completion of the coal hearings, which are now occupying the attention of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, Senator Smith W. Brookhart will make an effort to secure action on his bill to eliminate block booking, blind booking and arbitrary allocation of product. The coal hearings are expected to continue until May 1st.

It is said Senator Brookhart will offer one amendment to his bill to provide for a new elective system of arbitration. The independent exhibitors favor a system of one arbitrator selected by each side, the two agreeing upon a third member.

It is said that if the committee decides to take up the Brookhart bill within the next two weeks it is possible action may be secured on it in the Senate, before the end of the session, but there is no possibility of it going before the House of Representatives this year.

S. Carolina Exhibitor Rally to Repeal 10% State Tax

SOUTH CAROLINA exhibitors are rallying their forces in a determined effort to repeal the 10 per cent admission tax now imposed on theatres of that state. Following the suggestion of A. H. Yoemans, owner of the Rex theatre, Sumter, who recently sent out a letter urging exhibitors of the state to meet and plan concerted action, a number of the most alert and progressive theatre owners of South Carolina agreed to assemble at the Jefferson Hotel in Columbia at 11:00 a. m., Wednesday, April 18, for a full discussion of the matter following which a definite plan of action was to be adopted.

Exhibitor leaders fought desperately against the measure that imposed the state admission tax, but the bill was rushed through in the closing hours of the session some three years ago and enacted into law before it was generally known that the measure was pending. South Carolina theatres had no real relief when the federal admission tax was removed, because the 10 per cent state tax was promptly levied.

Ontario Adopts British Classification of Films

THE newest innovation in film circles of the Ontario Provincial Government is the adoption of regulations similar to those in vogue in Great Britain of marking motion picture releases either "A" for adult consumption or "U" for universal consumption, classifications for the type of audience for which they are best fitted in the estimation of the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors.

Children are not prohibited from witnessing the pictures bearing the "A" designation but theatres are required to place the film classification in their advertising and it is expected by Premier Ferguson that parents will take steps to see that their children attend only those shows where "U" features are being presented. This new ordinance adopted in Ontario is in direct contrast to Quebec, where the law prohibits the admission of children to all theatres.

1st National to Have One Sales Convention

FIRST NATIONAL will hold one big sales convention this spring instead of the three regional meetings as at first proposed. The change in plans has just been announced to the branch managers and salesmen by Ned E. Depinet, general sales manager. All branches in the United States and Canada will, therefore, assemble in Chicago, where the sessions will be held in the Drake Hotel, from April 29th to May 3rd.

The decision to have one gathering of First National's sales forces, instead of three regional conventions, is meeting with the approval of branch managers and their salesmen, who feel that it is inspiring to them to get together under one roof, to rub elbows, to exchange experiences, to kindle new ideas and to feel the strength and enthusiasm that comes from contact with one another.

On an evening before the marriage, Mr. Payette bade farewell to his bachelor days with a party to his gentlemen friends at the Crandall home. An automobile tour of Canada is the plan of the couple.

All Quebec Cities Affected by Law Banning Children

Official announcement has been made by Premier L. A. Taschereau of the Quebec Provincial Government that the new law prohibiting the admission of all children from theatres, already in force, applied to all cities and towns of the Province of Quebec and not to the theatres situated in the City of Montreal alone.

Exhibitors in the smaller towns have found it very difficult to make parents realize that the law prohibits the admission of all children from theatres whether accompanied by adults or not. Theatres in Hull, Sherbrooke, Three Rivers, St. Hyacinthe and other places have been hard hit by the new statute.

Minneapolis Arbitration Harmony Prevails

Important Court Ruling Against Warners Holds Board Can Ban Company Cases

WITH the refusal of the District Court in Minneapolis to grant an injunction to Warner Bros. restraining the arbitration board from debarring Warners from arbitration hearings, harmony again prevails in the territory on the part of exhibitors with regard to arbitration matters.

This harmony meeting was held during the week and marked a resumption of proceedings broken off January 13, at which time exhibitors withdrew from arbitration when Warners refused to comply with a decision of the board and sought the injunction restraining the board from outlawing the company cases.

The Minneapolis court ruling is an important one, for in its decision the Court said it was "manifestly impossible" to compel specific performance of a contract of this kind, in view of the fact that the board was a voluntary committee and not a governmental agency, nor an official board of any corporation.

"The suit was not brought for the specific performance of the arbitration clause in film contracts because the parties to the contracts are apparently willing to arbitrate, but the board, which is not a party to the contracts, refuses to act," the Court held. "The board is not a governmental agency, nor does it appear to be an official board of any corporation. It appears to be a mere voluntary committee, selected by three corporations and governed by a set of rules adopted by them.

"It is manifestly impossible for the court to compel the specific performance of a contract of this kind. The service to be rendered is of such a distinctly personal nature that its performance necessarily involves the active, unconstrained co-operation of the defendants themselves. Their mere presence at a hearing might be compelled, but we cannot compel them to hear and remember the testimony, or to use their judgment in determining the issues. The court does not act in a mediatory capacity. It does not make orders unless it is able to enforce them.

"Plaintiff forgets that it, and the parties with whom it has controversies, are always at liberty to submit their disputes to other arbitrators. There is nothing official or exclusive about this board, although it apparently has considerable prestige in the motion picture world. The parties have not been deprived of their rights to arbitrate their disputes. They have merely been denied the services of this board.

"It is urged that the plaintiff will occupy an unfavorable position in the market if it cannot include the privilege of arbitration by this board in its future contracts with theatre owners. But the right to command the future services of the board is in any event entirely beyond the purview of this suit. If the board is under any legal obligation to serve the plaintiff, such obligation is based upon a series of implied contracts. Each of such contracts is necessarily limited to a specific transaction. After the passage of the resolution complained of (the resolution denying further arbitration on Warner Brothers' suits), no further contractural obligations could be implied. The board cannot be compelled to assume new obligations indefinitely."

The Minneapolis meeting was held almost immediately following the announcement of the court ruling and an equity and justice proviso was made at once as a part of the business on instigation of W. A. Steffes, Northwest exhibitor unit president, who asked that the arbitration agreement, entered into by exhibitors and distributors a year ago on suggestion of C. C. Pettijohn, be read into the minutes.

Take New Stanley Posts

Hyman Managing Both New York and Brooklyn Strand; Plunkett in Charge of Production Department

IN accordance with plans completed by the Stanley Company to produce unit shows for circuiting to the de luxe presentation houses in that chain, the new stage production department this week got under full headway, with Joseph Plunkett, formerly managing director of the Mark Strand in New York, assuming charge of the department, and Edward L. Hyman, for the past eight years managing director of the Brooklyn Strand, taking over the management of the New York house. Hyman will continue as managing director of the Brooklyn theatre and as well will produce one unit every three weeks for the Stanley circuit. Harry Crull, manager of the new Stanley theatre in Jersey City, will be an associate producer also, and will stage one unit every week.

Hyman has moved his office from the Brooklyn Strand to Broadway and is now located at the New York house of the Stanley Company at 47th St. and Broadway. Under this arrangement it is planned to eliminate duplication of certain work which heretofore has been done by each house independently. In addition to his duties as managing director of the Brooklyn house, Hyman recently has been producing units for the Earle theatre in Washington and the Stanley in Baltimore.

The production department of the Stanley Company, which has been placed under the charge of Joseph Plunkett is being geared to stage unit shows for a circuit ultimately destined to embrace twenty weeks playing time. The presentations are to be staged on an elaborate scale, with specialty numbers introduced in the course of miniature musical revues having choruses and special scenery. Resident jazz bands whose leaders will act as masters of ceremony will work in with the shows at the houses on the circuit. There is a possibility that the Stanley Company may produce units for booking into other picture theatres than those of its own circuit.

The Stanley theatre in Jersey City will be the first house to play the unit shows, which will then be sent to the Strand in New York, the Strand in Brooklyn, and later on to Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington and Baltimore.

The production activities will be concentrated in New York, where the performers will be booked and the acts whipped into shape for circulating over the chain.

Actual occupancy of the theatre is expected possible on September 1st. Motion picture presentation will be the policy, it is declared. The present seating capacity is 4,000.

Lease of the Metropolitan followed negotiations by Wolf, Block, Schorr and Solis-Cohen, representing the Stanley Company, and Edward Loeb and William McKim, on the part of Lulu Temple.

N. Y. Upstate Showmen Form a Co-operative

EXHIBITORS of upper New York State will apply for incorporation of the Association for Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors, a buying co-operative similar to the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of New York, which Aaron Sapiro heads. Pfeiffer declared his organization would function with the New York association and that it would have a membership of 350 and would control about 500 theatres. "We expect to purchase together with the Greater New York group," said he.

Barrymore is now in New York. John W. Considine, Jr., supervisor of the star's next vehicle, will join him on April 21st. Both he and Barrymore will then return to Hollywood for conferences with Lubitsch.

Wide Range of Ideas Used in Theatre Drives for "Speedy"

IF anyone thereabouts was ignorant of the fact last week that Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" was playing at Shea's Buffalo, it was no fault of Charles B. Taylor, publicity man for the theatre. In exploiting the picture to a fare-you-well, he laid down a barrage of publicity that was inescapable by anyone with unimpaired eyesight or hearing. Window displays of special cards ballyhooing "Speedy Boy," the theme of the picture, were featured in window displays of every Victor dealer in Buffalo, and the music shops also chipped in with their bit on this song. "Speedy Boy" also was broadcast over the radio by Ted King and the Buffalo theatre stage band through WMAK, and also by Tom Grierson, the Buffalo organist, with brief talks interspersed, explaining that the song was the theme of "Speedy." Optical stores were tied up with, their window displays featuring the type of glasses Lloyd wears. "Speedy Service" window stickers, numbering several hundred, were placed in conspicuous spots in candy and soda shops. "Speedy" tire covers were put on the busses of the largest sight-seeing company in Buffalo.

Placards playing up the "Speedy" service angle were hung in Postal Telegraph offices in the downtown section. Many tire stores put in special window displays harping on the speed of their tires and the speed in the picture. Underwood typewriter agencies displayed cards telling of the speed of the machines and the speed of "Speedy." Numerous other tie-ups were effected by Taylor.

Using the radio to broadcast the laughter that flooded the Colonial theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., during the showing there of the Harold Lloyd picture, "Speedy," was a most effective plan of exploitation that was introduced by Manager Lee Levy.

Levy placed several microphones in the auditorium and connected them with a loudspeaker stationed in the front lobby, immediately above the ticket booth. By this means every sound within the theatre was transferred simultaneously to the street. The street crowds thus caught the spirit of fun that was rampant inside.

A coast-wide tieup on "Speedy" has been arranged for all West Coast Theatres with the General Petroleum Corporation. More than twenty-two hundred 24-sheets will be posted by the petroleum corporation.

Windows will be utilized to plug "Speedy" which also is the name of the corporations' new gasoline product. Twenty-five thousand "A" boards will be used at gasoline stations and the house organ of the company, with a million circulation, will feature the tieup.

Newspaper advertising will be taken dovetailing with play dates of the picture. A special horse-car ballyhoo has started a tour of the coast, leaving Los Angeles for Seattle, and stopping in scores of cities and towns.

It is one of the most wide arrangements of its kind ever made.

Capitalizes on Auto Ads With Group Drive for "Straight 9"

THE bookings for the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City looked unusually strong to Manager Marsline K. Moore so he set out to sell his pictures for the month in a group. Automobile companies were all trying to outdo each other in advertising their "Straight Eights" so Moore went them one better and called his month of big pictures the "Straight Nine." When his teaser advertising broke, it created no little interest for the public was eager to learn about the "Straight Nine."

Moore began his campaign in the newspapers with a small slug which he had specially drawn. The slug was in the form of a "9" with a banner ribbon across the middle upon which was lettered the word "Straight." This trade mark was carried out in all his advertising. It was used on his posters, in the follow-up newspaper ads, and on 3,000 teaser stickers, which adorned automobile windshields and plate glass windows.

The theatre front was elaborately decorated for the month. A huge beaver board "9" was fitted with electric lights and faced two ways. This large electric sign was a replica of the trade mark, Moore had been using in the newspapers, and on his billboards.

On the opening day of the "month of months," Moore promoted the NeHi bottling company to build a booth in the lobby of his theatre and serve free drinks to his patrons. The NeHi company gave away many bottles of their beverage and advertised this feature in the newspapers.

When the manager made his plans clear to the newspaper that he intended stepping out on nine pictures in a row and advertise them in a group, the newspaper was receptive to the idea and showed their appreciation with a five column layout of the stars who would appear in the pictures. In addition to the layout, the newspaper carried a generous amount of extra stories relating the merits of the attractions scheduled.

Showmanship

Briefs

MANAGER GEORGE E. WATSON used a device in the lobby that gave the effect of shadow bathing to advertise "Ladies Night in a Turkish Bath" at the Garden Theatre, Davenport, Ia. This shadow effect was thrown on a white sheet that hung between two of the outer lobby doors. The shadow was that of a girl going through the motions of disrobing and taking a bath. This stunt was used during the busy hours of the day and at other times a beaverboard cut-out was used back of the screen which produced almost the same effect without the motion.

AS a stunt for the presentation of "Tillie's Punctured Romance" at the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, during the week of March 26, Manager Walter F. Davis called for written impressions of the first picture with this title, starring Chaplin and Marie Dressler, which was shown in 1914. Three prizes, starting off with a first prize of 12 tickets, were offered for the best replies. Contestants were expected to state when and where they saw the first "Tillie's Punctured Romance" and to describe briefly how present film subjects compared with those of 1914. The contest closed the last night of the week.

MANAGER P. D. GRIFFITH had a shadow box in his lobby that only showed half of a leg to advertise "Silk Legs" at the York Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn. The shadow box was a three-sheet frame. In the space for the large photo, two leg forms with stockings on them occupied this space with the back of the frame draped. A card covered the upper half of the space. Copy on this card read, "You Can See Only Half of it Here—Come Inside to See Madge Bellamy in Silk Legs."

MANAGER FRED O. SLENKER—ten days in advance of play date made an announcement through the local papers about a model airplane contest for which prizes would be awarded. Other details of the contest followed as did mention of "The Legion of the Condemned" an airplane picture playing at the Columbia Theatre, Davenport, Ia. The models entered in the contest were used to give atmosphere to the lobby display.

THE "birth" list furnished Bert Levy, manager of the Columbia Theatre, Portland, Oregon, was a lively exploitation idea on "That's My Daddy." Each morning Mr. Levy sent the new fathers a pass to the show. The word of mouth publicity on this stunt made it well worth while.

West Coast Department to Furnish Bands in L. A.

Auto Agency and Paper Join "Red Hair" Stunt

The local Chevrolet agency and the newspaper joined Manager E. E. Whitaker in staging a highly successful "Red Hair" party to exploit the showing of the picture of that title at the Rex theatre in Spartanburg, S. C.

The party was announced in an article published by the newspaper, and was for all girls having red hair of 15 years and over. The girls were the guests of the theatre at a matinee showing of the Clara Bow picture. Girls wishing to attend the party were advised to meet at the Chamber of Commerce between 2:45 and 3:30 on the opening day of the "Red Hair" engagement at the Rex.

The Chevrolet agency asked for the privilege of conveying the titian-haired beauties to the theatre in their new models in which nine cars were used to transport the 30 red-haired guests. Banners were carried and it seemed the longest way to the theatre was the sweetest way because the cars traversed the main street twice and visited all parts of the city

"Chicago" Extra Sniped On Copies of Newspaper

The Strand theatre in Ft. Wayne, Ind., made use of a novel exploitation idea to advertise the showing there of "Chicago," when "extras" carrying a front page headlined with stories about Roxie Hart, the "Jazz Slayer" were distributed. Manager Kalberer of the Strand purchased 1,000 copies of the "bulldog" edition of the local paper and pasted over the front page the special "Chicago" extra issued as one of the advertising aids on the picture. The papers thus sniped were distributed free in front of the theatres of the Quimby Circuit, which operates the Strand.

Newman's Trade Improves With Policy Change

For several months, ever since the opening of the new Loew's Midland theatre, the fate of the Newman theatre, first run downtown house of Kansas City and ranking second to the Midland, has been much discussed. Business at the Newman "dropped out of the bottom" after the opening of the Midland. This week, however, a new plan is being tried out. A new policy, two first run changes in programs a week, instead of weekly, as heretofore, may prove a success, the management believes. Thus far attendance has shown a slight increase.

Golf Driving Contest Exploits Picture

THE Fort Worth Record-Telegram and the Worth Theatre of Fort Worth, Tex., jointly sponsored a golf ball driving contest to aid in the exploitation of "Sporting Goods."

There were three divisions including men, women and boys and three prizes were awarded to the first three in each division.

Contestants teed off Thursday afternoon prior to play dates on the Worth Hills Golf Course. The person driving the little sphere the farthest was the recipient of the first prize award and so on.

Selects Fashion Show Models from Entrants in Beauty Contest

MANAGER ERNEST MORRISON, together with the Atlanta Constitution and the George Muse Clothing Co., gained much publicity for their fashion show by running a newspaper contest for models. This fashion show was an added attraction to the picture "The Garden of Eden" at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

Aside from receiving advance publicity for the show it brought out 250 applicants from whom twenty were selected. The contest was started two and a half weeks in advance of play dates and the newspaper carried cuts and stories in advance.

A cut showing the applicants appeared in the paper four days in advance and this was followed on the next day by a 2-column cut of the twenty winners.

Fans Supply Ideas for Campaign on "The Patent Leather Kid"

AN interesting elaboration of the poster and newspaper ad contest was brought into play as a publicity medium for the showing of "The Patent Leather Kid" at the North Shore theatre, Gloucester, Mass., when Manager J. P. Kincade offered prizes of theatre tickets for the best suggestion as to how to advertise the Richard Barthelmess vehicle.

The offer was made in a paid ad in the columns of the Gloucester Times. The ad was headlined "Win a Prize. Help us advertise!" This display was two columns wide by eight inches deep.

A quick response registered from the ad and the day following publication of the offer, Kincade received a number of suggestions, some quite obvious and of no importance, and others decidedly worth while. One was a poem on "The Patent Leather Kid" from a woman living in Rockport. From Danvers issued a suggestion for a one-sheet drawing of a pair of patent leather shoes with a baby crawling out of them—an idea adaptable to lobby and window display for a tie-up with a shoe store.

The contest developed the fact that a surprisingly large portion of the picture-going public has an appreciation of the advertising methods used by a theatre as well as a knowledge of entertainment values.

The publication in the newspaper of the poem submitted and other ideas suggested by readers gave added publicity to the idea which Manager Kincade carried out in this campaign.

The idea is a good one and the day or two it ran brought much valuable advertising for the theatre and the picture. From the results developed in Gloucester, this style of exploitation seems particularly adapted and valuable in the smaller towns.

"Gaucho" Gym Tournament Staged by Press and Theatre

DURING the first run of Douglas Fairbanks in "The Gaucho" at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, the management and the Cleveland Press cooperated in an elaborate tie-up which attracted city-wide attention. The newspaper sponsored a Douglas Fairbanks Jump Tournament, which was also known as the "Gaucho" Contest.

Entries from all the local gyms were assembled by the Press to participate in these three typically Fairbanks events; Running high jump, Standing broad jump, and Hop, skip and jump. Preliminaries were held on March 12th, at various gyms, and the finals were dated for March 21st, at a central location. A. A. U. rules governed the contests, and entries were limited to amateur athletes under 19 years of age. The trophies were silver loving cups to winners of the first, second and third places in all events; and, in the Special Fairbanks Trophy Contest, silver cups to three athletes making best averages in three events.

A supervisor was appointed for the tournament for each of seven groups, comprising community centers, settlements, municipal bath houses, Y. M. C. A.'s, Lakewood Recreation Dept., Cleveland Heights Recreation Dept., and the Recreation Council.

During the engagement of Douglas Fairbanks in "The Gaucho," sporting goods stores featured the tournament in window displays and also replicas of the bolas used by Fairbanks in this picture.

Awards to Managers in West Coast Drive

Special weekly cash prizes are being given managers of West Coast Theatres during the life of the Managers' Opportunity Drive, the membership campaign now under way. The various theatres throughout the coast have been split into four groups and the managers who head at the top of each group each week will receive an award. There will, of course, be additional prizes for the managers leading at the close of the entire drive, which comes to an end on June 16th.

Key City Reports

New York City

SOME of the big Broadway houses cashed in very nicely on the week following the close of the Lenten season but all in all the big splurge of looked for business at this particular time did not arrive—except in spots. Again it was the out-of-the-ordinary attraction, picture or names and picture with names that pulled the most money. There wasn't any noticeable overflow to help out the weaker shows. The outstanding attendance records for last week among popular priced theatres went to the Rivoli, Paramount, Roxy and Capitol, while the Criterion, Astor and Gaiety divided honors among the two-a-days.

Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" at the Rivoli shattered any previous record for a week's attendance at that house, topping the best mark by 4,000 and by the looks of things at the present writing this week's trade will be just as heavy. "Speedy" is sure-fire. This is the first time the Rivoli ever went over $50,000 for a week's trade.

After spending almost five months at the Embassy "Love" (M-G-M), the Gilbert-Garbo necking film went into the Capitol and did remarkable business—so good that it was entirely justifiable to hold it for a second week. No question about this pair's popularity in this neck of the woods—and elsewhere.

An elaborate Easter presentation bill and a Fox picture "Why Sailors Go Wrong" served to fill up the big Roxy theatre for the week, the better of the honors going to the show. This house has the last three weeks as excellent ones to its credit. However, it was "The Jazz Singer" that pulled the people in the other two. On account of the calibre of the Al Jolson film, the show was very noticeably cut.

At the Paramount Paul Whiteman and "Skyscraper" (Pathe) helped the big Publix house along to another good week. This time it was both Whiteman and the film plus the regular show that did the trick. The Rialto is still showing "The Legion of The Condemned" to very fair business but this film is expected to give 'way soon to another picture. The Strand with "Ladies Night in a Turkish Bath, a comedy, did a bit better than average week for this house.

The little Cameo did not do so well with Harry Langdon in "The Chaser," general comment being that this comedy is not so hot. It did not get the usual hold over and Zakoro's "The Last Moment" came in.

The Hippodrome had Warner Bros. "Beware of Married Men" and "We Americans" (U) put in another week at the Colony. Attendance marks for the latter at the Colony are not in keeping with the worth of the film. As mentioned before, this house is in a tough spot on the Street. Somehow or other, the customers walk right by—up or down.

Among the specials Paramount's "Wings" continues to cash in, both on account of transatlantic flights and the excellence of the production. It may be held well into the warm weather. The Astor with M-G-M's "Trail of '98" is apparently settled down for a considerable run, business being consistently good here ever since the film got under way. "Uncle Tom," after battling along for six months to an up and down brand of trade is about ready to call it quits. In spite of a lot of wisecracks among the trade this film made it a pretty good run. At the Embassy "Two Lovers" (U. A.) turned in another very good week's business and this film will probably stay for two or three more weeks.

The Gaiety with "Four Sons" is leading the Fox films on Broadway at present with "Street Angel" a runner up. The latter came in for excellent comment at its recent premiere and has not had sufficient time to show its real strength. The customers have not forgotten "Seventh Heaven" and the Farrell-Gaynor team will undoubtedly pull them in for some time to come. "Mother Machree" at the Times Square appears to be the weakest of the trio. Warner Bros. will let "Tenderloin" and Vitaphone out of Warner's theatre in time for the premiere of "Glorious Betsy" on the evening of April 26. Vitaphone song numbers and conversation is also included in the latter.

The much talked of "Abie's Irish Rose" comes to town this Thursday—for several years, some say.

Chicago

"SPEEDY," at the Roosevelt, appears to have been the best box-office attraction of the week in Chicago.

"The Legion of the Condemned" also has got on with the picture going public, and McVickers did a satisfactory business. At the Chicago "The Smart Set" was the feature picture, with 'Tick Tock" as the stage show, and Spitalny's orchestral attraction, "Easter Chimes," rounding out the program which resulted in fair box-office reports. Paul Ash, whose second year at the Oriental is rapidly nearing its end, offered his patrons "The Song Shoppe," and on the screen "The Cohens and the Kellys in Paris," business being good.

"My Best Girl" was replaced at the United Artists Theatre by "Sorrell and Son" on Friday, business being somewhat off the first part of the week, but reviving with the presentation of the new feature.

The Granada had a strong bill offering Gilda Gray in person and on the screen in "The Devil Dancer," northside theatre-goers turning out in goodly numbers. Another northside house which featured its stage attraction was the Uptown, where the four Marx Brothers appeared in person, and "A Night of Mystery" was the picture. Here also the pulling power of name acts accounted for good business. "The Jazz Singer" with complete Vitaphone accompaniment, held up well during its second week at the Marbro.

"The Student Prince" on the screen, and Benny Kreuger and his band in "Fast Mail," comprised a bill which did much to dispel the dullness at the Tivoli, a fairly satisfactory week being recorded. "The Jazz Singer" was repeating its northside success during its week at the Avalon, and at the Capitol "Old Ironsides' on the screen with Del Lampe and his orchestra in his inaugural show, played to big business.

Minneapolis

THEATRE business picked up nicely the week following Lent, and the crowds were turning out to the movies again in a way they had not done for two or three months. The new Minnesota Theatre had affected the business of other houses pretty badly the first two weeks of its existence, but the third week the other theatres seemed to feel the competition less keenly. This may have been due to the close of Lent, or merely to the fact that the newness of the Minnesota was wearing off just a little.

Lent probably explained the increased general business, however, for the Minnesota continued to do a whale of a business with Bebe Daniels in "Feel My Pulse," and the Publix stage unit "Havana." The State made an excellent showing with "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," the first really good business since it changed its policy three weeks ago and featured the bigger attractions. The Strand found Elinor Glyn's "The Mad Hour" a nice drawing card, but Marion Davies, in "Quality Street," was more or less of a flop at the Garrick. This house, by the way, closed its doors Friday night for the summer. Ordinarily it might have kept open through May, but not with the Minnesota for competition.

Pantages found "Dressed to Kill" was a nice box-office attraction, and The Hennepin-Orpheum enjoyed good business with a program which included "A Blonde for a Night." The Lyric did a brisk trade with Milton Sills in "Burning Daylight," while Emil Jannings in "The Last Command" came into the Grand for a second run showing, and duplicated its previous success at the Strand.

The neighborhood houses, as a rule, shared the good business of the loop theatres. The leading ones—the Lyndale, Loring, American, Rialto and Lagoon—were showing such pictures as "Sorrell and Son," "City Gone Wild," "The Dove" and "The Last Command."

Seattle

EDDIE PEABODY, dynamic musical director, master of ceremonies and banjoist-entertainer de luxe, returned to the Fifth Avenue Theatre here last week and took the town by storm. Peabody has been away from this house since last September, when he finished a seventeen-week engagement that put the Fifth Avenue on a big money-making basis, and his return last week proved that he was still the greatest individual box-office magnet in the history of Seattle show business. Assisting him in his specialties Peabody had his "pal," Jimmy Maisel; Gogo DeLys, charming vocalist; and Fanchon-Marco's "Jungle Idea," which was seriously considered one of the finest stage acts even seen in a local picture house. "The Divine Woman" on the screen pulled its share of business through the name of Garbo, but failed to get much audience enthusiasm. The house did far and away more than any other theatre, grossing close to $20,000 in one of the biggest weeks in its history.

The Seattle Theatre, with four very big weeks to its credit, showed a very noticeable drop in gross, attributed to the remarkable box-office power of the Fifth Avenue show. "The Crowd" was the film feature at the Seattle—it was pleasing to "thinking" audiences, but was slightly marred by being cut to conform to the time available for picture presentation. On the stage, Paul Ash's "Mikado of Jazz" presentation by Publix was pleasing to the eye, but lacked the class and speed of previous Publix presentations. It got by very well with audiences, however. A good week, but not big, as has been the custom since the recent opening.

With the exception of those two houses, show business was decidedly off. The United Artists Theatre, playing "Doomsday," fell considerably below the average, with one of the weakest engagements in recent months.

"Finders Keepers," at the Columbia Theatre, was just an average attraction with fair business to its credit. "The College Hero," at the Blue Mouse, with Vitaphone and Movietone features, attracted a little more business than has been apparent for the last three weeks, but still failed to hit anywhere near the old gross of a few months ago.

"Streets of Shanghai" was the Embassy attraction that played to average houses. The Orpheum, with vaudeville and "Wallflowers," played to slightly improved gross over the last two weeks, and "Sharpshooters" at Pantages attracted the usual average business but no more. The latter picture got the break between the two vaude-film houses.

Reduced prices and bigger shows downtown still shows their effect on the neighborhood theatres, where business is quiet, but the Egyptian still maintains a good pace with its second-run Vitaphone films and Movietone installation.

Harrisburg

BY far outstripping any other attraction for the week in Harrisburg theatres, the Harold Lloyd comedy, "Speedy," did a tremendous business at the Colonial, where they had to stand, waiting for seats at every performance, including the matinees. Due to the fact that the Colonial's manager, Lee Levy, had done some excellent exploitation work for "Speedy" during the week in advance of its showing, the house was filled on the very first day. That was enough to clinch the success of "Speedy" for the entire week.

It is probable the exceptional success of "Speedy" was reflected in less business done in other first-run houses. At Loew's Regent the main attraction was William Haines in "The Smart Set," and, while the play was entertaining, the attendance was below the usual average at that theatre. Zane Grey's "Under the Tonto Rim," with all-star cast, was the feature offering at the Victoria, and met with a fair degree of patronage.

At the State the film attraction the last half of the week was "Peaks of Destiny," a German film importation. The State did a good business, stimulated by the presence of a fashion revue, featuring Lucille, French designer, with seven Atlantic City bathing beauties as models

BUSINESS came back with a bang in Albany and Troy last week, with cool weather predominating and with excellent attractions booked at practically all of the first-run houses.

At the Mark Strand, in Albany, "Old Ironsides," preceded by a rather elaborate program of exploitation, went over big, with the crowds even standing at Monday's matinee, something decidedly unusual for Albany. What is more to the point, the crowds represented money, there being but little "paper" and that for a group of orphans. A newsboy band of 32 pieces was also featured. The Vitaphone presentations, including a sketch by Irene Rich, as well as selections by Gene Morgan and his orchestra, did not score any too heavy.

The Leland, in Albany, played to packed houses throughout the week with Norma Shearer's "The Latest from Paris," coupled with an Our Gang comedy, a Grantland Rice Sportlight picture, and a newsreel. Clinton Square, in Albany, played to good business with double features, including "Soft Living" and "Jaws of Steel."

At the Mark Ritz, in Albany, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" ran ahead of "The Noose," and served to pack the house day in and day out, the week probably constituting close to a record breaker. Hermanus Bleecker Hall, in Albany, continues to be packed each night with a combination of double features, together with three acts of vaudeville, as well as "silver nights" and "opportunity nights." There is no doubt that many were drawn to Proctor's Grand Theatre, in Albany, during the last of the week by Milton Sills' "Burning Daylight," featuring Doris Kenyon, who is well known in this city, and a favorite.

Neighborhood houses in Albany report that business came back exceptionally well, following Lent.

In Troy "The Last Command" ran for four days at the Troy Theatre to very good business, apparently everyone liking the picture. Easter Sunday went over well. For the last three days of the week, "The Smart Set" proved a good box-office attraction at the theatre. At the Lincoln, "Sporting Goods" ran just fair for the first four days, while "Dressed to Kill" did not do anything to brag about.

Cleveland

THE movies had a slim week here last week. There were several bright spots, there were a lot of good pictures, and there was every reason why folks should attend the shows. Except one. They had no money. They were either getting squared up for the pre-Easter purchases, or they were saving up for the post-Easter sales. Anyhow you figure it, the result's the same, and the box-offices were not decorated with long lines of prospective patrons.

Everyone agreed that "The Crowd," playing at the Stillman, was a great picture, wonderfully worked out, interesting, and food for thought. But it couldn't buck the department store competition. "Speedy" did do well at the State. There is always time between purchases for a laugh, and "Speedy," as good as all Harold Lloyd pictures, managed to overcome the prejudice against buying theatre admission tickets. "Across to Singapore" did just fairly well at the Allen, in spite of its endorsement by local critics as "exciting melodrama." Keith's Palace, which almost always plays to capacity houses, did its usual business with "Skyscraper," interesting comedy-drama, and "The $24 Island" as an added picture attraction. "Lady Raffles," well-done detective story of the popular variety, pulled just fair attendance at Reade's Hippodrome. Keith's East 105th St. reported average results with "The Night Flyer," a tense, exciting melomovie with good cast. "The German Side of the World War," shown locally for the first time at the Oriental, did fairly well.

"Wings," playing a first-run road show engagement at the Colonial Theatre, played to very satisfactory evening attendance, but to light matinees.

Neighborhood theatres report that business was below average for the week. Legitimate theatre competition was normal.

Cincinnati

THE week in the Queen City looked like a "Who's Who in Hollywood," insofar as names are concerned. Competition among the stars was unusually keen, and all houses came in for a good share of the takings.

Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer," in the third and final week at the Capitol, maintained the high attendance record of the preceding fourteen days. The engagement could no doubt have been extended with profit.

Another holdover, Harold Lloyd in "Speedy," at the Lyric, did a big business, the picture drawing as well the second week as the first.

The Albee, with Lon Chaney in "London After Midnight," together with a Gus Edwards unit and other stage attractions, did exceptionally well.

Keith's held over "The Legion of the Condemned" for a second week, with a slight decline in returns toward the end of the run. "The Night Flyer," at the Strand, drew well, as did also Menjou in "A Night of Mystery" at the Walnut. John Gilbert in "Shame," first half, and Shirley Mason in "Stranded," last half, got a good share of patronage on both.

The N. V. A. benefit brought out large crowds at the downtown houses, where this event was featured.

Atlanta

PRETTY weather last week brought a boom to Atlanta box-offices, with the Capitol leading, followed closely by the Howard.

The banner picture prize goes to "A Girl in Every Port," with Victor McLaglen and his eight beauties, which played to standing houses at the Capitol all week.

Not far away Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" at the Howard likewise drew 'em, and shrieks of laughter sounded forth. Lloyd has a sure box-office number in this fun-gem. Too bad the presentation was on the decline, the plausible reason, perhaps, why McLaglen came in first, for a special drawing card, Walter C. Kelly, went over big on the Capitol stage.

"Circus Rookies" did not fall so hard at Loew's Grand, but comedy competition elsewhere was too keen for Dane and Arthur. At Keith's Georgia "The Shepherd of the Hills," with a good vaudeville bill, brought a neat gross.

The Rialto, playing the second showing in Atlanta of "The Dove," and "Sorrell and Son," enjoyed a good week, as good as weeks at the Rialto go.

Three villain thirsty numbers, "Galloping Thunder," "Where the Trail Begins," and "Spoilers of the West," plus the innumerable showing of the Dempsey-Tunney fight films, scored for the Tudor.

Des Moines

THE Vitaphone pictures had their opening at the Des Moines Theatre and had capacity business as soon as the doors were opened. "The Jazz Singer," which has just started, bids well to be a popular attraction.

The Des Moines just completed a week with "Speedy" and, on account of the fact that the Vitaphone inauguration was played up in its advertising, the Harold Lloyd picture showed some effect from the little attention given it in advance advertising. The picture was well liked, but did not do what Harold Lloyd usually does.

At the Capitol the stage show was not up to standard with "Circus Daze," and "The Love Mart" must be held responsible for attracting business on its own as the theatre did not suffer any decrease in attendance It did a good week. Billie Dove grows in favor.

At the Strand "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris," played without any special exploitation, did a tremendous business.

"South Sea Love," with Patsy Ruth Miller, finished the half week and did very nicely.

Milwaukee

ONE of Milwaukee's best, biggest and busiest weeks in the downtown theatres has just been closed. The weather was moderate and clear, and the downtown attractions brought out throngs. Business over the week end at the beginning of the run was not especially good, but things picked up appreciably after Easter.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" was featured at the Wisconsin, and was in no small measure responsible for the excellent business that theatre enjoyed. The Strand, showing "The Legion of the Condemned," was the scene of a projection room fire on Monday night, which in no way interfered with business later in the week. The picture was well attended, and is being held over for a second week. "The Enemy," at the Merrill, was very well received.

"The Gaucho," in its second week at the Garden, justified its continued run, and business here was far better than during the preceding week. "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was re-presented at the Alhambra, and resulting patronage was very satisfactory. The Palace enjoyed unusually good business throughout the week. The photoplay, "Midnight Madness," was enthusiastically received.

Business in the neighborhod theatres picked up considerably this last week. "The Crowd" brought in good business to the Oriental. "Wild Geese" was offered at the Garfield, Uptown and Tower, and drew very good houses. "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" drew well at the Modjeska. "The Dove" procured very satisfactory results at the Venetian.

Baltimore

BUSINESS picked up considerably for the first-run houses in Baltimore during the week beginning Monday, April 9, with "The Crowd," featuring Eleanor Boardman and James Murray, going over with a bang at Loew's Century, with Jack Partington's revue and other vaudeville favorities on the same bill. Audiences liked "The Crowd" immensely.

A very good business was done by "The Gaucho" starring Douglas Fairbanks at Loew's Valencia, but the picture did not do the business expected.

Throughout the week at the Stanley, "The Heart of a Follies Girl," starring Billie Dove, and the stage presentation act, "In Granada," with Van and Schenck as added feature, went over very big through the week at the playhouse.

A nice business was done at the New Theatre with "Dressed to Kill," co-starring Edmund Lowe and Mary Astor, with the Primrose Four also on the bill.

The jungle picture, "Simba," did pretty good business at Ford's Theatre, a legitimate house, where it was shown as a road show attraction with prices at $1.50 at night and $1 for matinees top prices.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

729 Seventh Ave., New York City

"Lady Raffles," starring Estelle Taylor, did good business at Keith's Hippodrome with five acts of Keith-Albee family-time vaudeville.

At the New Garden "Love Me and the World Is Mine," starring Norman Kerry and Mary Philbin, only did a fairly good business with eight acts of Keith-Albee high class acts on the same bill.

"Buttons," starring Jackie Coogan, proved a good business getter at Warners' Metropolitan in the afternoons when many children went to see it in this uptown house, and a fair business was done at night throughout the week. Vitaphone attractions were also on the same bill.

At the Rivoli "Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath" was the feature film attraction, with Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill. Arthur Spizzi presented Howard Emerson and his Rivolians. Business throughout the week was fairly good.

Salt Lake City

SOME exceptionally heavy box-office receipts have been reported this past week at the Salt Lake downtown picture houses. This having been L. D. S. Conference week here, aided somewhat in attendance records, as several thousand people came to this city from the surrounding territories. Weather conditions were none too good, as cold winds and rain have been the rule throughout the week.

The Capitol Theatre was forced to close their box-office window every night after the first two nights, at nine o'clock, due to the big stage attraction they put on in addition to the picture performance. This stage offering was the Eight Famous Victor Artists, who literally brought the house down, and who filled it to overflowing, in conjunction with Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon in Jack London's "Burning Daylight."

Jackie Coogan, in "Buttons," played to capacity houses at the Pantages in connection with their vaudeville performance, which offered the noted Huston Ray, pianist, as a feature attraction. A midget piano is being given away at the Pantages as a tieup with a local music dealer and Huston Ray, which also added to the attendance record.

Charlie Chaplin, in "The Circus." went over in a fine manner as an extended run at the Paramount Empress. A special stage production was also offered here.

The Victory Theatre enjoyed above the average business last week during the presentation of "Dressed to Kill" with Edmund Lowe and Mary Astor, according to Manager Ray Hendry. Very satisfactory attendance was the rule at the American Theatre with "The Heart of Maryland."

The Gem Theatre presented Tom Mix and Tony in "Horseman of the Plains" to well filled houses throughout the week.

San Francisco

ANOTHER big crowd patronized "The Jazz Singer," which was shown with Vitaphone at the Embassy Theatre for the eighth week. Many came from small town districts to see this picture a second and even third time. During the week prices were reduced for children in many of the motion picture theatres, as it was Easter Week, and children were having vacation. The Embassy was one of the first theatres to announce lower prices for the week.

Loew's Warfield Theatre was crowded the entire week. The picture shown was "The Divine Woman," which, together with the Fanchon and Marco presentation, "Jazzical Justice," as interpreted by Rube Wolf, attracted thousands. The Granada Theatre also attracted many; "Circus Rookies" and the Partington act, "Russian Revels."

The Golden Gate Theatre did very well with "San Francisco Nights," and vaudeville, and the Union Square Theatre did exceptionally well with "Tongues of Scandal" and five acts of vaudeville; all special.

"Partners in Crime," a comedy, fairly well filled the St. Francis Theatre the evenings of the second week. "The Enemy," shown at the California a second week, did very poor then, as it did the first. It being held over only because it was under contract, it is said.

Residential Theatres continue to do well. Among the outstanding ones being, The Majestic Theatre, with "Les Miserables," the Alexandria Theatre, with "Stark Love," and the Coliseum Theatre, which showed "That's My Daddy" on the screen and the "Varsitonians," college book singers and dancers from the University of Washington.

Dallas

THE attractions offered at the Dallas theatres the past week were unusually good, and, with the exception of two days of continual rain, the first part of the week, was good.

At the Majestic, "A Dog of the Regiment" with Rin-Tin-Tin, and three of Hal Roach's "Our Gang" kids in person, chalked up a good box office week with most of the credit going to Scooter Lowry, Johnny Downs and Mary Korman, the kid actors, who more than pleased the public.

"The Jazz Singer," with Al Jolson at the Melba, brought the Melba its banner week, since its opening as a Publix theatre. The opening was slow due to the very bad weather, but business increased rapidly and the end of the week still had them standing. "The Jazz Singer" continues for at least one week longer.

At the Palace, Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" got the business, and kept them standing after a fair opening. The picture was well liked and Lloyd drew all the business as the Publix presentation was far below par.

"The Garden of Allah," with Alice Terry and Ivan Petrovich, at the Capitol, brought a good week's business, but not the amount of business that was expected.

At the Old Mill, "Serenade," with Adolphe Menjou, and "One Woman to Another," with Florence Vidor, had a fair week's gross.

The Arcadia secured only fair business with "French Dressing," with Lois Wilson and H. B. Warner, and "The World at Her Feet," with Florence Vidor.

New Orleans

BOX-OFFICE receipts spurted in the downtown motion picture houses with the end of the Lenten season. During the 40-day period of sack cloth and ashes, especially during Holy Week, business had experienced an awful drop.

The Saenger Strand Theatre took the lead in receipts and attendance over New Orleans' premiere houses, Loew's State and the New Saenger. "The Patent Leather Kid" was the feature attraction and the house broke records. Every performance was packed. So big was the demand that the Strand held the Dick Barthelmess feature over a week. Excellent publicity and exploitation put the picture over in great style.

Loew's State came next. "A Night of Mystery," with Adolphe Menjou, was the screen attraction that drew them to the popular Canal Street playhouse. This photoplay, coupled with five acts of excellent vaudeville, was a fitting program for the theatre's second anniversary and Easter Week observance. The picture was well exploited and publicized.

The New Saenger Theatre did an excellent week's business with Harold Lloyd in "Speedy." This proved to be excellent entertainment for patrons of the house. Seven acts of Publix vaudeville were coupled with "Speedy," but it was the film that attracted them to the house.

"13 Washington Square," with Alice Joyce, was the Orpheum feature film, but the N. V. A. Week vaudeville bill pulled business to the University Place Theatre.

John Gilbert, in "St. Elmo," was the Crescent feature, and the week's business was above average. A musical tabloid show was presented in conjunction with the picture. Local film fans flock wherever Gilbert is shown.

The Liberty showed "Love Me and the World Is Mine," and the box-office cash register clicked more times than it had done at any time in several weeks.

William Russell continues to prove a popular actor in New Orleans, judging by the way customers flocked to the Palace Theatre, to see "Woman Wise." A musical comedy show is presented in addition to the film, but, due to the fact that the past week's show was one which had been presented a few weeks previous, credit for the week's business is credited to the Russell vehicle.

Pittsburgh

THE Penn, with William Haines on the screen in "The Smart Set," and on the stage "Sun Shades,' a Frank Cambria unit, did a very healthy business, with the Haines picture keeping the audience in very good spirits throughout the entire performance.

The feature picture at the Aldine was "Baby Mine," with Karl Dane and George K. Arthur, which was just fair. Jas. J. Corbett and Bobby Barry headlined the vaudeville show, and drew a very nice attendance.

The Nixon opened this week with "Wings," a picture that has been very much exploited, and they had no trouble selling this attraction.

Stanley Theatre, with Clara Bow in "Red Hair," did about the same average as the Penn. Incidentally this is the first week for stage units at the Stanley. There is room for lots of improvement in this unit. "Sky Blue" is the name of it.

The second week for Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" at the Grand did not play up to expectations. Pittsburgh is not so hot for held-over attractions, excepting very big productions such as "The Big Parade," etc.

For some reason or other, with the exception of the Penn and Stanley, things were not what they should have been, considering the fact that this was the first week after Lent.

Buffalo

ALL previous box-office records were shattered decisively last week at Shea's Buffalo by "Speedy," Harold Lloyd's newest money-maker. With the picture ably exploited, crowds jammed the theatre from the moment the first show started on the opening day of the week, until the new bill was ushered in seven days later. With two more days of the week yet to go, "Speedy" already had topped the previous high box-office mark, established by "The Big Parade." Other previous box-office records, set at various times by Paul Whiteman and his orchestra, Sousa and his band, and Gertrude Ederle, melted into virtual insignificance alongside "Speedy." The movie-going public passed through the doors of the Buffalo with a consistent regularity that delights the heart of showmen. "Araby," the stage presentation, also "clicked," and the bill was universally pronounced one of the best ever brought to the Buffalo.

Not to be outdone, Shea's Hippodrome also established a new box-office record, due largely to the presence of the Harry Carroll revue. "Ladies Night in a Turkish Bath" was the picture. Carroll's revue set the town by the ears, and the advertising given him by word-of-mouth from Sunday's patrons kept the crowds coming in all week long.

Excellent receipts came the way of the Great Lakes, where the picture was "A Girl in Every Port," and the stage bill, headlined by Dorothy Ray in a syncopated revue "The Heart of a Follies Girl," and a vaudeville program headed by "The Four Bradnas," who perform real stunts with straw hats, drew good crowds to the Lafayette.

Marion Davies in "The Patsy," and a stage bill headed by Norton Brower in "Bughouse Fables," were the attractions at Loew's State, and the customers flocked to the house in pleasing numbers throughout most of the week.

Coming after the Lent season, the week was one of the most profitable for Buffalo houses in recent months, despite some unfavorable weather and the presence of George Arliss and "Hit the Deck" at the legitimate theatres.

Tampa

EASTER SUNDAY started the week off in great shape. The weather was ideal, and, after the Holy Week vacation, all the fans came back and gave the theatres record attendance. "Speedy" was the feature of the first half at the Tampa, and Lloyd showed his speed by crowding the record established by Clara Bow. Business was big for the full four days of the run. "The Showdown" was featured the last half, and it did very well.

"Tenderloin" and four special Vitaphone presentations, held over for a second week at the Victory, continued to draw very good business. Sunday was big and the rest of the week was very good.

The Strand had an immense business on Sunday with "South Sea Love," and Monday went over very good. "Finders Keepers," used the following three days, did not seem to click.

News Reel Resume

The flight of the Bremen, from Ireland to an island not far from the coast of Labrador, is an achievement which receives due recognition from the editors and cameramen of our several newsreels. There are other items to attract more than passing notice—the opening of the baseball season; the unveiling of Lee Stone Mountain memorial and stirring shots of the American and British fleets on the high seas—but these stories are a bit overshadowed by the one relating to the latest conquerors of the Atlantic.

Paramount News No. 75 first presented shots of the Bremen in Dublin and then went on to show the activities of the Germans with their gliders. Continuing the reel were views of Sub. S-4, in which 40 lives were lost; the Stone mountain unveiling; firemen review in Tokio; an animal novelty; coast guard cutter off on an iceberg hunt; a daredevil and his risking of life.

Novelty was had in an intimate scene of a 74-year old flagpole climber and Jack Dempsey. The British grand fleet in the North Sea; Charlie Paddock sprinting and Leadbeater [illegible] in Toronto were additional highlights.

In 5388 were scenes of Carnival [illegible] men training for the Olympics; destroyers going into Brooklyn Navy Yard; sea going liner grounded in canal; Helen Wills; Swedish explorer on expedition into the Gobi Desert; a Coney Island in the heart of Paris; sister of the designer of the Bremen hopping off for Montreal; the relief pilot who flew to the crew of the Bremen.

Opinions on Pictures

The Chaser

Slow and Poorly Executed

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HARRY LANGDON, through this latest opus, will lose a lot of the popularity he gained when he quit the two-reel ranks to star in feature length comedies. In "The Chaser" he is right back to the two reelers, a two reeler that is padded and poorly gagged out to feature length.

There is hardly the thread of a story in this picture; there is no continuity and the direction, by Langdon himself, is poor. The gags are only fair and what there are of them are poorly executed. They are allowed to drag out to such length that they lose what little humor there is to them.

Langdon, unfortunately, is the whole works. There is not another role in the story that is worthy of mention, and aside from his usual comical makeup, he falls absolutely flat. He slowed down what might have been a fair two-reeler to the lackadaisical and languid pace of the personal character he always assumes. There are not as many gags nor as much action in this full feature length film as usually characterize the two-reeler, though the picture is styled after the two-reeler. Langdon needs better material than this and far better direction if he is again to assume the popularity he once enjoyed.

Drawing Power: Only the past popularity of the star may draw the customers to the box-office window. The picture will get little of the word of mouth publicity. It has little to recommend it. Exploitation Angles: There is little in the angles of the story or the gags that can be exploited. The star and the title seem to be the only bets open.

THEME: Domestic comedy in which the badly hen-pecked husband is sued for divorce, but instead of granting it the Judge sentences the husband to serve as the kitchen maid which he does until he becomes so humiliated he attempts suicide, but in doing so takes castor oil by mistake. The wife and mother-in-law think him dead when he disappears, but he returns to make them repent of their cruelty to him.

Produced by the Harry Langdon Corporation. Released by First National. Released February 12, 1928. Length 5,744 feet. The Cast: Harry Langdon, Gladys McConnell, Helen Hayward, William Jaimison, Charles Thurston. Director, Harry Langdon.

A Night of Mystery

Gripping Story, Well Done

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

IT is seldom that a heavy melodrama is so well done on the screen as is this one that stars Adolphe Menjou. But for the capable manner in which it is directed and handled it might be just another picture somewhat depressing and not too entertaining, but this capable cast gives such a generally good performance that it holds one fairly spellbound throughout.

The title might suggest another one of those mystery plays or pictures, but that is far from so. It is an out and out melodrama, but the story is so logical and convincing that it is a real pleasure to see it unravel to a most satisfactory conclusion.

Menjou is a splendid hero, as effective in the more melodramatic sequences as he is in the romantic ones, of which there are many throughout the action of the picture. His acting is really a splendid piece of work that could be effective only if not overdone and at no time does he overreach himself. He is given splendid support by William Collier, Jr., brother of the girl he loves, who is unjustly convicted of a murder; and by Evelyn Brent and Nora Lane, who divide the feminine honors in an exceptionally good picture.

Drawing Power: The melodramatic nature of the story together with the splendid acting and the logical tale unfolded should make it equally attractive at all classes of houses. Exploitation Angles: The tale is one that offers the best of reasons for the abolishment of capital punishment and the inconclusiveness of circumstantial evidence, both subjects of interest to newspapers; the star and the good supporting cast offer exploitation angles, as does the press book.

THEME: Dashing Captain is in love with girl, whose brother is convicted of murder which the captain saw committed by another, but by his silence he protects a former mistress who is now the wife of the French trial judge. The girl refuses to marry him because her brother is a murderer. Eventually the murderer confesses and there is a happy ending.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Released, April 7, 1928. Length, 5,741 feet. The Cast: Adolphe Menjou, Nora Lane, William Collier, Jr., Paoul Paoli, Evelyn Brent, Claude King, Frank Leigh, Margaret Burt. Directed by Lothar Mendes. Adapted from "Captain Ferreol," by Victor Sardou. Adaptation by Ernest Vajda.

Love Hungry

Pleasing Comedy Romance

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THE title of this picture might possibly suggest a more animated quest on the part of the love hungry person than what really follows, for starving folks do get vicious at times—but such is not the case. It's just a nice little program affair, with the sincere and pleasing work of the principals standing out as the best thing about it. Victor Heerman can also be credited with a more or less adequate brand of direction—but the film does drag through the first half. "Love Hungry" can be placed under the classification of what is termed in this field an "audience picture." Not one bit of naughtiness in it, and one that should make the members of any censor board exclaim: "What a nice, clean film!" There are some really amusing situations, and some of the subtitles are quite good. Lois Moran, Lawrence Gray and Marjorie Beebe render an excellent account of themselves.

There is nothing startlingly original about the story. A discouraged chorus girl, the daughter of struggling parents, returns to her home accompanied by a girl-friend. They find a star boarder occupying one of the rooms. Quite a bit of play is made on the girl's arrival. Tom, the boarder, playing his role as a great help to the family, attempts to sell Joan the idea that she should marry a wealthy man and, subsequently, introduces her to one. Joan is really in love with Tom, who, in addition to holding down his regular work, is writing a story entitled, "How to Marry on $40 Per!" Following a number of events, Tom finally wakes up to the fact that they love each other, and they decide to give the $40 a whirl.

Drawing Power: A clean, wholesome comedy romance, which will satisfy most audiences.

Exploitation Angles: Play up title and names of principals.

THEME: Comedy romance in which discouraged chorine returns home. Plans marriage with wealthy man, but ends with engagement to man she loves, and they start off life on $40 per.

Produced and Distributed by Fox Films. Length, 5,792 feet. Released, April 8, 1928. The Cast: Lois Moran, Lawrence Gray, Marjorie Beebe, Edythe Chapman, James Neill and John Patrick. Directed by Victor Heerman.

Mad Hour

A Tale of Jazz and Repentance

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS "Mad Hour" is a well played and more or less true-to-life tale of jazz, its possible consequences and the repentances that are apt to follow it. It becomes harrowing and untasty as its climaxes develop and it causes one to reflect if it is not just what might happen as it does happen in the picture, to any jazz-mad pair of youngsters.

It is a horrible ending and one that hardly seems justified in the closing sub-title, "The Wages of Sin Is Death," for, as a matter of fact the girl, on whom the tragedy falls, is not nearly so much the sinner as the sinned against. However, it is an ending that is entirely logical and it is somewhat a relief from the usual happy fadeout. It is just what might be expected in the circumstances when a poor flapper girl weds a horrible cad who is the son of a wealthy father. The girl is unjustly sent to jail, has her mariage annulled and her child taken from her all because she is without funds and is deceived through her continued love for the cad.

Sally O'Neil is just about the whole picture. She is equally effective as the jazz-mad girl and the terribly oppressed young wife and mother. Her work is altogether commendable and the highlight of a picture that holds the interest throughout. Donald Reed is the caddish young husband, who is seen to better advantage in the jazz sequences than in the more serious moments as the story develops. Lowell Sherman does well as the stylish crook, but the role is a comparatively small one. The direction of the picture seems unusually good.

Drawing Power: It is a story of jazz, crooks, prison and other elements that have their appeal to picture house patrons, and being well acted should prove a good draw in any type house. Exploitation Angles: Elinor Glyn's name and the title will suggest ways of exploitation, as will the jazz and the prison angles and the popularity of the leading players.

THEME: Son of wealthy and socially prominent family weds daughter of poor taxi-driver as result of wild jazz party. He is disowned by father and the youngsters are inveigled by a clever crook to unwittingly return stolen jewels and receive the large reward for him. She is captured, sent to jail and while there gives birth to a son, which is taken from her and her marriage annulled. She is freed and returns on the night of her former husband's second marriage. In distraction she drives off at the wheel of the wedding car and plunges over a cliff to her death.

Produced and distributed by First National. Released March 4, 1928. Length 6,625 feet. The Cast: Sally O'Neil, Alice White, Donald Reed, Larry Kent, Lowell Sherman, Norman Trevor, Eddie Clayton, James Farley, Rose Dione, Tully Marshall, Margaret Livingston, Jack Eagan, Kate Price, Mary Foy, Iona Holmes. Story from Elinor Glyn's "The Man and the Moment." Adapted by Tom Geraghty. An Alan Dwan production. Directed by Joseph C. Boyle.

The Adorable Cheat

Fair Society Drama

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS first Chesterfield production under the supervision of Lon A. Young tells a story that has often been repeated and sometimes in a more entertaining manner than this one. It is altogether too slow moving and its climaxes are unconvincing; then too, the incidental action is so stereotyped that the tale is almost entirely without suspense. It is too easy to foresee the culmination of the tale.

Lila Lee is starred in the picture and to her credit it must be said that she is as winsome as ever and she does well in a role that gives her little opportunity to display anything but her winsomeness. She is just a sweet young society girl, very much in love with the shipping clerk in her wealthy father's establishment. She is the adorable cheat because she goes to work as assistant to the shipping clerk under an assumed name and without the father having knowledge of the fact. All of which means little or nothing to the story except that it gives her the opportunity of inviting the shipping clerk to a week-end party at her home, where the real action takes place.

The cast is a fairly well balanced one, but everything about the picture is so commonplace there is little chance for any of them to show real ability. Cornelius Keefe is the young lover and is as attractive in the role as is Miss Lee. The roles of the others are rather insignificant, but capably handled.

Drawing Power: It is neither better nor worse than the general run of these pictures and should do fairly well in the neighborhood houses. Exploitation Angles: Lila Lee is probably the best bet you have along exploitation lines.

THEME: Daughter of wealthy manufacturer falls in love with his shipping clerk and unknown to her father gets a job as shipping clerk's assistant under an assumed name. The romance ripens and he is invited for a week-end party to her home, where her weakling brother through heavy gambling losses, rifles the father's safe and suspicion is turned on the shipping clerk. He proves his innocence, wins the place of the wealthy man's general manager and also the girl.

Produced and distributed by Chesterfield Motion Picture Corp. Released April 15, 1928. Length, 5,400 feet. The Cast: Lila Lee, Cornelius Keefe, Burr McIntosh, Reginald Sheffield, Gladden James, Harry Allen, Alice Knowland, Virginia Lee. Director, Burton King. Supervised by Lon A. Young. Story by Arthur Hoerl. Edited by Lee Anthony.

The Little Yellow House

Oodles of Appeal Here

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

MR. AVERAGE FAN will enjoy the homely appeal, the situations familiar to ordinary folk that are to be found in this story by Beatrice Burton. There is sentiment—mother love, a sudden death, a yearning lover—that at no time is maudlin or far fetched. The simple little tale it has to tell has been invested with a naturalness, a fervor that is close to the heart of Main Street. Thousands of families experience trouble in such a guise as is presented here. Many a fan, then, will not look with askance at the story. Exhibitors are out to please the average patron. Here's the type of story that will turn the trick.

"The Little Yellow House" does not go in for action, melodrama and live-wire heroics. It is more of characterization and every-day incident. Not soon will you forget Emmy (Martha Sleeper), petulant and somewhat selfish; or Pop Milburn (William Orlamond), nearly all the time gloriously soused; nor Ma Milburn (Lucy Beaumont), his tired and patient wife; nor Grandma Pentland (Edythe Chapman), the cross and stern grand-parent. The acting from all hands is good. Leo Meehan's direction is responsible to a great extent to the homely appeal of which the picture smacks.

Drawing Power: A good picture which will draw well. Exploitation Angles: The average man and woman will find it recognizable. Use a toy house for your lobby display and have it glaringly yellow. Tell your patrons it's an appealing film.

THEME: The story of a family, chiefly about the girl, who despises her home and regards it as a hovel. After she has lived away from it for a time and discovered that her love for luxury had almost spoiled her life, she returns to her mother well satisfied to accept the love of a staunch admirer.

Produced and Distributed by F B O. Released, April 24, 1928. Length, 6,103 feet. The Cast: Orville Caldwell, Martha Sleeper, Lucy Beaumont, Wm. Orlamond, Edward Peil, Jr., Freeman Wood, Edythe Chapman. Story by Beatrice Burton. Adaptor, Dorothy Yost. Continuity by Chas. Kerr. Cameraman, Al Siegler. Director, Leo Meehan.

The Crimson City

Okay as Program Fare

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

MELODRAMA in the dives of Singapore, an Englishman on the road to degradation, a Chinese girl who lifts him up, scheming Orientals—all these details and more have been welded together to form a moderately entertaining story. The acting of Matthew Betz, of John Miljan, of Anna May Wong aids considerably in making effective the scenes of scheming and plotting, of degradation and sacrifice with which the picture is plentifully stocked.

The scenes dealing with the water front dive of "Dagger" Foo (Matthew Betz) have been directed with vigor by Archie Mayo. Naturally, they are the most interesting of the story, but the figure pervading them—the lonesome little Chinese girl, Myrna Loy—is not effective nor does she ring so true. Miss Loy has the sloe-eyes, the exotic features which, it would seem, would make her well suited for her role. However, she is strangely unemotional. Betz is first-rate as the scheming dive-keeper, while Miss Wong, with what little she has, proves that she is a capable Oriental miss when it comes to acting. Sojin, in a minor part, is quite effective.

With its knife-throwing, its strong Oriental atmosphere, and many menaces, "The Crimson City" is a fairly strong story with which to attract the fans.

Drawing Power: Okay for houses catering to lovers of melodrama. Exploitation Angles: Create an Oriental atmosphere in your lobby. Carry out a campaign or ballyhoo which has a strong Chinese flavor.

THEME: Melodrama in which Chinese girl saves Englishman from clutches of Chinese dive-keeper. The Englishman thinks he is wanted by the police so he dodges his own kind, and avoids the English girl he loves. However, he is freed of guilt when the real party confesses, and is reunited to the white girl when the Chinese miss renders him a valuable service.

Produced and Distributed by Warner Bros. Released, April, 1928. Length, Six reels. The Cast: Myrna Loy, John Miljan, Leila Hyams, Matthew Betz, Anders Randolf, Sojin, Anna May Wong and Richard Tucker. Story and scenario by Anthony Coldeway. Director, Archie Mayo.

"Slippery Head"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

JOHNNY ARTHUR is the extremely dumb and forgetful hubby, and Lucille Hutton, his impatient wife, in this Tuxedo comedy written and directed by Norman Taurog. The latter has not succeeded in waking the star up and giving him a snap and dash—at least not quite as well as Harry Sweet, who made of "Visitors Welcome," a recent Arthur vehicle, something fast and comical.

The type of comedy that forms the bulk of this newer piece is best described as roughhouse. They break everything in sight. One scene, showing Arthur entertaining with a violin, while Jack Miller accompanies on the piano, turns out to be a veritable slam-bang, slapstick affair. Arthur becomes entangled in his music stand, his face is bruised somewhat as the pianist has just become encased in violins, his general aspect is awry. His accompanist fares no better as he, too, unfortunately falls inside of the baby grand and emerges with a mess of wire and an aspect of disorder. This roughhouse type of comedy has found favor with audiences in the past, and it will probably collect a share of chuckles when it is flashed on the screens of neighborhood and similar houses for which it is best suited.

"Fighting Destiny"
(Universal—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

FRED GILMAN is starred in this western featurette, which varies little if any, from those that have gone before. It is made up of intrigue, romance and fast riding, with the suspense element lacking because you always know just what is going to happen next.

Gilman is Dan Lincoln, the Texas Ranger, who is in love with Mary Robins, owner of the J. X. Ranch. Mary's brother has fallen in with bad company, particularly the villainous foreman of Mary's ranch. The youth attempts to hold up Mark Siddons, who has just sold an adjoining ranch and is returning with the proceeds of the sale.

Young Robins is chased off by the arrival of the ranger, but in the chase abandons his horse to hide in the wagon being driven to the ranch by his sister. He tells sister the holdup was just a fake and she hides him. The ranger finds the horse and sees that it is branded with the J. X. brand.

Mary returns to the ranch and becomes convinced the holdup was not a fake when she overhears the foreman calling down her brother for his bungling. She persuades the youth to ride to the Siddons' ranch and warn him that a further attempt is to be made to hold him up, but the foreman and his gang knock out the boy and hasten to the holdup scene, for which Mary has already started to sound the warning.

Meantime the ranger comes upon the unconscious youth, who redeems himself by accompanying him to the Siddons ranch and effecting the capture of the desperado band.

"Blow By Blow"
(M-G-M Comedy—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

AS far as the throwing of food is concerned this must be put on record as being the most completely done thing of its kind the writer has ever witnessed. As an accomplishment in the way of hurling a full course of dinner—soup to nuts—in the several faces around a dining table—it must be rated as a masterpiece of this sort of comedy making. Never, we dare state, has food ever traveled faster across a table—or with truer aim. Max Davidson is the head of a quarrelsome family. Daughter is entertaining the boy-friend amid the racket. Boy-friend states that more laughs are needed in the house as they gather at the table. Spec O'Donnell playfully shoots a piece of butter to the side of his father's face. From this point on the game gathers headway, ending in a fusilade of food throwing—of course providing the missing humor in this household.

"Barnum and Ringling, Inc."
(M-G-M Comedy—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

WE heartily recommend this Robert McGowan comedy as one which will delight the younger generation. The kids really ought to get a great kick out of it for as usual, "The Gang" put on one of their prankish games. This time it's a circus. That there is a dearth of real animals does not daunt these young showmen. Most of the zoological exhibit does not quite run true to form, it may be admitted, but its quite complete nevertheless. Complications, due to the fact that a Ritzy hotel is being used to stage the show, arise in the person of the house detective. The animals escape and the corridors become full of scurrying guests and animals.

"Women Chasers"
(Universal—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

IT is unfortunate that Mike and Ike are not given better material with which to work. They are a pair of hard workers, they are characters that undoubtedly have an appeal, and they have winning screen personalities, but they are asked to put over a brand of humor that is too silly for any but the smallest neighborhood houses. If their stuff was toned down a trifle and a little more attention was paid to story material there is no doubt they would achieve great popularity.

In this one they answer an advertisement for two brave men and immediately get the positions. They are employed by a wealthy man who is being blackmailed by a beautiful girl and their job is to recover certain letters in her possession. They hasten to a cafe where she visits and disguise themselves as waiters. The letters are concealed in the stocking of the girl. They go through all sorts of antics in trying to recover them and because of their actions the place is thrown into an uproar, which eventually culminates in a free-for-all fight and the complete wrecking of the establishment.

"Limousine Love"
(M-G-M Comedy—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

CHARLEY CHASE can generally be depended upon to come through with what this writer considers the best in two reel comedy making of the present day—and this one is not an exception. Fred Guiol can also be credited with the good direction. As in certain other two reelers to his credit, Charley is on his way to meet his bride. It is their wedding day. From the time his car crashes into another the story and action swiftly develops, being built around the fact that a married woman, drenched from a spill in a roadside pool by auto, has invaded the rear of his limousine in order to dry her clothing. Her husband comes along and begs a ride from Charley. Her clothing vanishes down a stream when its rescue is attempted. Suspense, as to the discovery of the wife by the husband, is admirably kept up—right up to the time of the ceremony. The cast includes Edna Marian, Viola Richard, Edgar Kennedy and Bull Montana. An excellent two reeler.

"Felix the Cat in Comicalities"
(Educational—One Reel)

NO wonder the little black is popular—when they give him vehicles like this. It's been a long time since the writer has witnessed an animated cartoon that can boast so wide and varied an assortment of gags, so snappy and speedy a tempo. Space does not permit an enumeration of the many clever touches that are discernable in almost every sequence of the cartoon. Suffice it to say that it is very good, one of the best Felix cartoons yet. In their way the comedy incidents are on a par with the gags of a Lloyd comedy. They've got finesse and a tangible knack.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"The Flying Age"
(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

A FEW jumps ahead of all of the modern improvements on flying machines, is this cartoon of the Aesop Fables series. It has flying trains and ferry boats; it has flying perambulators, and regular taxis in the flying service. They even wind up old Al's legs and he ascends as far as they will spin and then he is out of luck and compelled to make a forced landing. Some of these flying machines on which there are open air swimming pools and other unique devices are bound to be productive of hearty laughs. There is no story in connection with this one, but it is a distinct novelty even for these fable cartoons.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Nicknames"
(Educational—One Reel)

THE main idea of this Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge real is to present the various nicknames of the United States in a manner that entails both sense and nonsense. The different states come in for a brief period of attention. A shot or two of their natural grandeur, like the dells of Wisconsin or the Green Mountains of Vermont, a bit of clever animation in the titles—all in all, the reel is a fairly suitable program filler.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"From Soup to Nuts"
(M-G-M Comedy—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THREE huge cakes and a banana peel accomplish the undoing of the Stan Laurel-Oliver Hardy team in this one. The two comedians take a turn at "buttling" for a Ritzy hostess. The main trouble is that, their experience as waiters, was gained at a railroad restaurant. Many complications arise; misinterpretation of orders to bring in a "salad undressed" brings Stan to the dining room in his underwear—the underwear being a compromise, on his part, with his conscience. Hardy tries three times to navigate from the kitchen with the big cake, but the banana peel wins each time. It's a very fair two reeler. E. Livingston Kennedy directed and it's a Hal Roach production. Besides the stars, Anita Garvin and S. J. Stanford are in the cast.

"Hungry Hoboes"
(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

CARTOONIST WALT DISNEY displays his usual skill and an unique brand of humor in this Oswald cartoon which bristles with funny incidents and mechanical devices. It shows Oswald as an adventurous hobo stealing a ride with a companion on a freight and both very hungry.

The freight is transporting a shipment of livestock and a stray chicken comes the way of the hobo pair while they are in transit. In the absence of a match Oswald drags his companion along the road-bed until his trouser's seat becomes so hot it serves as a broiler. At a stopping place the hobo pair are chased by a train attendant and in the chase all sorts of devices are used until Oswald and his pal make their getaway on another freight.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Barnyard Artists"
(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

IT all comes out in the wash, is the moral of this cartoon in which Old Al and Henry Cat turn artists and draw animated cartoons, which are the basis of a show for all the animals. Their finished product is flashed on the screen and shows an aggressive pup.

Then comes a smart rabbit who defies the pup and makes him take water. When the real character of the pup is learned his former victims chase after him to the edge of a cliff, where one of the elephants stumbles over the cliff and the ensuing crash into the lake floods over the screen, through the theatre and out into the streets, taking the audience in its wake. There are several bits of humor in it that makes this one well above the average.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"All Bear"
(Educational—One Reel)

QUITE often the contention is heard that a program of interesting short subjects would beat the average movie program of feature, presentation and the rest if the two did actually contest. Certainly you rarely see subjects as good as this Walter Futter Curiosities, which Beth Brown has so delightfully edited and titled. A program of shorts of the calibre of this one would, the writer is sure, be worth the time spent viewing it—more so than the average feature program. There is a dash of fun in the comical antics of the two lumbering bears. Recommended as enjoyable fare for audiences anywhere.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Matching Wits"
(Sportlight-Pathe—One Reel)

THIS is another of the refreshing Grantland Rice "Sportlights" and it should be an attractive filler on any program. It is a matching of wits between the sportsman and his prey, the game fish and the game bird. Here is shown some of the skill required in landing the fighting steelhead trout, and again the devices necessary for the hunter to outwit the fast-flying duck and quail.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Some spirited displays featuring a spirited personality. The ads reproduced above exploited Clara Bow in "Red Hair" at several first run theatres, including the Des Moines, Des Moines; Apollo, Indianapolis; Princess, Toledo; Albee, Cincinnati; Capitol, Salt Lake City, and the Howard in Atlanta. The Princess, Apollo and Howard ads are three-columns, the other three are of two-column size.

The ball and carnival event took place in Broadway auditorium, Buffalo's most spacious convention hall, last Thursday, and it was a glorious affair, with more than 1,000 persons in attendance. From virtually all towns and cities in the section, from Utica to Jamestown, members of the organization flocked to this city for the occasion. AFTER putting in some seven hours of business-like and efficient labor, both mental and physical, three burglars walked out of Loew's Eighty-sixth Street Theatre at Third Avenue shortly after dawn Monday, having made $2,893 on their investment of $1.20, the price of three tickets admitting them to the theatre the night before.

For four hours they had forced the theatre watchman to continue his rounds of the elaborate burglar alarm system and to signal "all's well!" each hour, while they attacked the safe with drills, nitroglycerine, sledge hammers and jimmies.

At 1 o'clock, two hours after the final fade-out had sent the Sunday night crowd home, the three yeggmen came out of the smoking room, where they had been hiding. Edward Hershey, of 2443 Goodwin Street, Astoria, Queens, was punching the automatic signal clocks which told a protective agency that everything was all right. Suddenly, they confronted him with revolvers, disarmed him of his automatic, and convinced him that his best course was to do as told.

One of the burglars remained with the watchman, sitting him in the orchestra while the other two labored over the safe in the manager's office at the rear of the lobby. Every hour, the watchman and his captor would make the rounds.

Two charges of nitro-glycerine were used on the safe before the two workers resorted to sledges and jimmies. The sound of the explosions were minimized by thick wads of plush hangings, which had been ripped from the boxes over the pit. A little past 3 o'clock, the two workers came out perspiring but smiling, and said to the third man: "We've got it. Let's go."

Hershey then was bound and gagged, his body made secure to an orchestra seat, and he was left alone. Forty-five minutes later he broke loose and ran to the street. At the corner he found Patrolman Frederick J. Conklin, of the East Sixty-seventh Street station, who sent for detectives.

Employees at the Universal exchange in Albany played the part of Santa Claus last week, first presenting a set of sherbet and other glasses to Miss Esther Kenney, billing clerk, who was married. Almost immediately, they presented Miss Helen Fineglass, the cashier, with a house robe, Miss Fineglass having resigned to be succeeded by Mrs. Lillian White, who was formerly connected with the First National exchange. Then along came James Tunney, the shipper, with the announcement that he was the father of an eight pound boy. Everyone suggested that the boy be named "Gene," but the father decided on calling him "Irwin."

James Lemke, former international president, and the present head of the stage hands union in Troy, will also attend the convention.

Harry Brooks, head of the motion picture machine operators union in Troy, will probably be the next sheriff of Rensselaer County, having announced his candidacy and with good chances of winning out.

He Fears It to Be a Scheme to Sell Equipment

H. CHASE, owner and manager of a theatre in Michigan, has been using alternating current projection arcs for some time and gives his reason for so doing that he believes the sale of direct current apparatus to be a scheme on the part of equipment manufacturers to "sell a lot of extra equipment."

His only complaint in connection with the use of alternating current for projection purposes, is that he has not sufficient light reserve to enable him to obtain a fairly constant screen intensity with films of different density.

He is now looking for ways and means of obtaining higher screen intensities without incurring too much expense, and he would prefer continuing the use of his present alternating current outfit if this could be done at all because he strongly suspects the motives of the generator manufacturers.

Here is his letter:

Dear Sir:

I have a small town 260 seat house and would like to get some information regarding my projection from some one who is neutral and not interested in selling equipment.

I am using the old style carbon arcs on 110 volt alternating current with compensarcs or inductors. Now everyone hollers about direct current being a so much steadier light with less flicker but I have been in a lot of big city houses where direct current is being used and in my judgment they all get more flicker than I do. In fact, people from the city come here and tell me that my pictures don't hurt their eyes like they do at home. My opinion is that this direct current stuff is a scheme to sell a lot of extra equipment.

The only trouble I have, and the question I want you to answer, is if there is any way I can get a brighter light without going to a lot of expense. My light is very fair, however, with the exception that when I get a dense film, I have no way of making it brighter.

My throw is 85 feet and the picture measures 9 x 12 feet.

Respectfully yours,
(Signed) H. H. Chase.

Schemes for Selling

Friend Chase, every manufactured article, whether it be a motion picture projector, a generator, a washing machine, electric refrigerator, automobile or what not, represents a scheme on the part of some one to sell a lot of equipment for the very selfish purpose of making money. If this were not so then there would be no incentive for persons to spend a considerable amount of time inventing new things to lighten our daily work and make our lives more enjoyable.

It is always the fond hope of every manufacturer that he will "sell a lot of equipment" and in order to realize this ambition he does everything possible to make his particular equipment the very best, either in point of quality or in point of value.

If you do not believe this to be so, then we call your attention to the automobile industry as representing an excellent example of present day marketing. Did you ever in your life see so much value as is represented by the cars now on the market? Yet every one of these automobiles is a scheme on the part of the respective manufacturers to "sell a lot of equipment" but in doing so, the general public is the gainer because never before has so much automobile been offered for so little money.

And to show the beneficial results of modern manufacturing and marketing methods, we quote government statistics to the effect that in the United States, there is one car for nearly every family. Nearly one-fifth of the families of this country own two or more cars.

Doesn't this look like an all-around profitable "scheme to sell a lot of equipment?" And does the general riding public appear to be worrying themselves sick because they proved to be such easy marks for the automobile manufacturers?

Modern life in this country is the direct result of intensive manufacturing and selling schemes and it is well that this is so because never before in the history of the world has any country been as prosperous as ours—even at this very moment when business, by comparison with recent years, is supposed to be slow.

We Are Not Neutral

And now, Friend Chase, as far as our not being interested in selling equipment is concerned, nothing could be farther from the truth. We are entirely bound up in the idea of seeing, and helping, the respective manufacturers in the motion picture industry sell their products. This includes you, as a manufacturer of entertainment.

In the first place, we are anxious to see all the producers sell barrels and barrels of film—more power to them. In the second place, we are just as anxious to see the equipment manufacturers sell bushels and bushels of projectors, generators, spotlights and everything else that goes into the equipping of a motion picture theatre.

And in the third place, we are even more anxious to see all exhibitors as manufacturers of finished entertainment, sell oodles and oodles of tickets so that they, in turn, can buy even more film and equipment in order that more, and yet more, tickets may be sold.

Don't you think that is a pretty good "scheme for selling equipment." Friend Chase? Wouldn't you be willing to entertain such a proposition? Manufacturers in other fields are doing the same thing. Why shouldn't you?

Look at the electrical industry? Isn't that intensive selling? Yet, who cares? Does the housewife complain because she must use an electric washer, an electric iron and a vacuum cleaner? Does the man of the house groan when he comes home and switches on his new seven tube all-electric radio?

No trade paper which has the interests of its industry at heart, can well afford not to be intensely interested in the sale of the products of the manufacturers which it represents. And your interests, as the ultimate manufacturer of entertainment, lie even closer to our heart.

The High Cost of Obsolete Equipment

Do you realize, Friend Chase, that by continuing to use inefficient, obsolete equipment you are throwing away every year, enough money to buy the very latest type of highly efficient projection equipment which will give you a picture far better than you ever dreamed of obtaining with an alternating current arc?

The best recommendation we can make, Friend Chase, is simply this. Your theatre is quite small and projection equipment to improve your projection can be installed at a very reasonable cost.

For your theatre, we can recommend the Mazda projection system, equipped with Bausch & Lomb parabolic condensers and Cinephor Series II projection lenses. This equipment not only will give you far superior projection results to what you now secure, with not the slightest trace of flicker, but it will provide an ample reserve of illumination to enable you to maintain a constant screen intensity, no matter what the density of the film might be.

The equipment is quite simple to handle. The use of this equipment should put you in a position to save several hundred dollars in operating expenses.

If the state of your finances cannot stand the outright purchase of this equipment, we suggest that you purchase it on a time basis from a supply house which has provisions for buying on this basis. We do not hesitate to say that by the time the final payment is due, the equipment will have nearly paid for itself and you will have presented your-

City Helps Universal Open New Theatre

The Downtown Business and Professional Association celebrated the opening of Universal's beautiful, new Venetian Theatre, Racine, Wisconsin, with a big parade in which "Venetian" night displays, floats by combined business men's organizations, the American Legion Drum Corps, the Eagles marching and other attractions were featured.

"U" rushed the completion of the equipment of this $1,000,000 house in time for the opening. Arthur Friedman who has been managing director for the Rialto Theatre, Racine, transferred his activities to the Venetian. His new assignment is in line with the "promotion-from-the-ranks" policy adapted by the "U" chain.

The Venetian Theatre seats 2,200. The land, building and equipment represents a total outlay of over $1,000,000. In addition to the theatre proper, the building houses a number of stores and offices. The second and third floors of the commercial building are under long term lease to the local Eagles Lodge.

The Venetian was built by the United Studios of Chicago to designs by Ralph L. Beaudry. The theatre is in Italian atmospheric style.

The auditorium is like an old Venetian garden—surrounded by high walls realistically covered with vines and flowers. Effect machines throw moving clouds on the sky ceiling; twinkling stars carry out the idea of a Mediterranean night.

self with a nice pair of illuminators which will be good for a number of years.

Such things as flicker and lack of screen illumination should never cause you to worry.

The Mazda equipment can be connected direct to your present 110 volt alternating current lines without the need for additional equipment.

D. C. Projection is Superior

As far as direct projection is concerned, Friend Chase, it is far superior to alternating current in that it gives more light for less money and should give a steadier, flickerless light.

We see no reason why flicker should be encountered with a D. C. outfit unless the projector was being operated so slowly as to cause it. It is also possible that you thought the sputtering of the arc, caused by faulty carbons, to be in the nature of flicker.

If a direct current arc is operated in an intelligent manner, however, it has no equal as an illuminator. The best operation from an A. C. arc is obtained by using a set of National White Flame Carbons, placed in line with each other and inclined backward at an angle of about 25 degrees.

Your best bet, however, as pointed out above is to arrange for a demonstration of the Mazda outfit.

New Theatres Announced for Upstate N. Y.

Frederick Ullman and associates of Buffalo, N. Y., who operated the Elmwood theatre there and the Syracuse at Syracuse, have just announced the steam shovel has started excavation on the site of the New Brighton theatre at 2607 S. Salina street, Syracuse. This theatre will have a seating capacity of 1740, including 200 box seats in front of the balcony. The building is to be of gray stone front, with dimensions of 107 feet frontage and 132 feet depth. It will contain four storerooms. One of the outstanding features of the interior will be a ceiling entirely of recess dome, lighted by an inverted illuminating system, with dual control from both stage and projection room. The projection equipment will be furnished by the National Theatre Supply company. The New Brighton is expected to open on next September 1, and it will be one of the foremost neighborhood houses in Western New York State.

Work is expected to get under way soon on the Jeffersonian theatre, a new playhouse at 1350-1352 Jefferson Avenue, Buffalo. The house will have a 1700 seating capacity and, although the theatre will primarily be for motion pictures and vaudeville presentations, the stage will be equipped for any kind of theatrical performance. The construction cost is estimated at $250,000 by the owners, the Jeffersonian Holding Corporation, a Buffalo concern. The interior decorations will be of novel design, the ceiling to be painted as a sky and a garden will be sketched along the sides, thus giving an open-air effect. In addition to a full orchestra and organ pit, there will be a provision for vitaphone synchronization. The architects are Louis Greenstein and Myron E. O'Neil, Jr.

J. Friedman announced plans for new $150,000 neighborhood house and business building at Comer Ave. and Shelby St. Permission of the park board to erect the structure adjoining Garfield Park is delaying operations. A 1200 capacity popular price house is planned. Residents are remonstrating the new house.

Will Rebuild Old Strand at Sunbury, Pa.

Further pursuing its policy of increasing the number of costly theatres in its chain throughout Northeastern and Central Pennsylvania, the Comerford Amusement Company, of Scranton, which now controls 150 picture and vaudeville houses, announced on February 7 plans for completely rebuilding the Strand theatre, Sunbury, Pa., at an expenditure of $200,000. The new building will be erected on the site of the present Strand theatre, on Market street, and work of reconstruction will begin April 1. The same interests made the further announcement of plans for the elaborate remodeling of the Chestnut street theatre, in the same city, the work to be done in the summer.

The new Strand will be patterned after the Capitol, which the Comerford company opened a few months ago in Pottsville, and the Capitol which it is now erecting in Williamsport. The seating capacity will be between 1,600 and 1,700, or twice the size of the present Strand. There will be ladies' and gentlemen's rest rooms on both floor and a mezzanine near the balcony. The new structure will extend 30 feet beyond the rear of the present building. Loge seats will be added to the balcony and the theatre will be equipped with a modern pipe organ and ventilating system. George Morris, of Scranton, designed the structure. James M. Blanchard, the present manager, will continue in charge of the house.

The Strand was originally built in 1909 by the Blanchard Amusement Company, and was then known as the People's theatre. It was bought by the Comerford interests in 1919 when the name was changed to the Strand.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"The Gorilla" — First National, Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia

Record: "Kind of picture that causes sensation because it is a little different from common run. Positively startling performance is this, and only by clever manipulation could so much funny stuff be interwoven with what is primarily weird."

Evening Ledger: "Director has succeeded in evoking atmosphere of horror. Comic relief helps things materially. Chuckles and roars frequently heard."

Sun: "Generous supply of chills and laughter. Has been made effective with Murray and Kelsey supplying laughs. Gorilla stalks through old mansion handing out death—and plenty of scares."

Inquirer: "Supplied plenty of excitement and offered guessing contest to audience to discover just who villain might be. Done in impressionistic manner with huge shadow of gorilla supplying sinister effect. Excellent cast.

Morning Ledger: "Emerges from stage an effective picture. In spite of generous laughter it remains real thriller. Good entertainment."

Bulletin: "Offers one of best balanced casts assembled for some time. Mystery melodrama of weird and eerie happenings."

"The Love Mart"—First National, Washington St. Olympia Theatre, Boston

Traveler: "Billie Dove's beauty remains undiminished from film to film. No matter what period of the picture is, her loveliness is just as poignant. She also has an opportunity to do quite a bit of acting."

Herald: "Fitzmaurice takes New Orleans and days of early 19th century and brings all life and color of this gay period to screen, adding enhancement to picturesque scenes with soft-focus photography which has won him fame. Romantic stuff which Fitzmaurice has handled with master touch, lending realism. Miss Dove makes a lovely picutre."

Post: "Beauty of star and photography, with added dash of romance and gallantry. Billie Dove a gorgeous eyeful."

Transcript: "Miss Billie Dove an 'eyeful.' It presents Miss Dove as belle of city in all of revealing simplicity of Empire gowns. Neither Fitzmaurice nor Miss Dove are novices at this entertaining business."

"Coney Island"—F B O, Hippodrome Theatre, New York City

American: "Full of color and authentic atmosphere, lavish sets and interesting story. Lois Wilson plays with grace and charm, and Lucila Mendez is sparkling jazz baby. Miss Mendez is pictorial delight as well as talented young actress and we hope to see more of her."

Herald-Tribune: "Excellent cinema spectacle. Moves with proper rapidity, and setting is pleasingly novel one. Titles, too, have creditable flavor or real talk."

Daily News: "Movie with title that is as sure-fire to box office in Kalamazoo as it is right here. Good deal of trick photography, no letup of action. Lucila Mendez gives a bright-eyed, spirited performance. In fact she is about best thing in picture."

Morning Telegraph: "Exciting melodrama. When Lucila Mendez dances she's there and offers 'mean' numbers. Cameron excellent in role of millionaire play-boy. Picture has been well photographed. 'Coney Island' with its whirling and various forms of amusements has been graphically portrayed."

Graphic: "Good photographic effects of whirling machinery that furnishes dizzy, thrilling fun and hot dance executed by Lucila Mendez. Good movie entertainment. Type that small town movie patron will enjoy. Miss Mendez as a snappy dancing girl quite steals feminine laurels of film. Lucila's vivid beauty screens well, and in her abbreviated costumes she showed one of reasons why she was so popular on musical comedy stage."

"Her Wild Oat"—First National, Albee Theatre, Cincinnati

Commercial Tribune: "Colleen Moore, box office magnet par excellence. The best thing she has turned out in a long, long time. Story amusing; titles genuinely clever and characterizations convincing. Film has unquestioned amusement and entertainment value."

Times-Star: Amusing romance. Accorded breezy and delicate treatment by Neilan that makes it most enjoyable. Star shows more real acting ability than ever previously evidenced. Some unusually funny sub-titles."

Post: "Colleen Moore did it that time. Film farce which is every bit good. Novelty, speed, action, romance and prettiness. Titles materially help fun along."

"Her Wild Oat"—First National, Grand Theatre, Pittsburgh

Sun-Telegraph: "Good entertainment. Real comedy with a lot of hilarity, scoring high in merriment classification. Plenty of fun develops."

Press: "Gives Colleen ample opportunity to display her versatility."

Post-Gazette: "Fast-moving story. Light but entertaining."

"Her Wild Oat"—First National, Wisconsin Theatre, Milwaukee

Wisconsin News: "Rollicking comedy . . . screamingly funny complications. Colleen's efforts . . . sure fire mirth-provokers."

Milwaukee Sentinel: "Colleen Moore reaps harvest of chuckles and bursts of laughter. Another box office winner. Snappy titles help to heighten comedy effects."

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy" — First National, Ambassador Theatre, St. Louis

Times: "Both entertaining and interesting; entertaining for humorous subtleties and situations and interesting for enormous sets and new style of photography. Contains some of best scenic trick photography we have seen. Titles extremely funny. Worth seeing. Amusing and different."

Post Dispatch: "Diverting and entertaining. Great mob scenes."

Star: "Epic of nonsense. Impressive. . . . Fine settings."

"The Dove" — United Artists, Rivoli Theatre, New York

Mirror: "A melodrama of merit. Norma Talmadge, Beery and Roland make fine showing. One indubitably satisfying movie, based on an equally satisfying play. A first class movie."

American: "Film scores with Beery and Miss Talmadge. Director Roland West has lost none of the gay color and delightful flavor of the original theme in his translation of it to the silver sheet. The story unreels smoothly. A painstaking and interesting piece of work. The picture's sets and photography, too, are artistic and beautiful."

"Hats Off"—Roach - M - G - M, Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles

Evening Herald: "The funniest as well as most deeply touching motion pictures make us cry—a paradox which finds its way into our everyday language as I laughed so hard I cried. I can describe in no other way my reaction to 'Hats Off.'

"This glorious slapstick occupies a subordinate position on the bill, but it saves the day as far as entertainment is concerned. It is no exaggeration to say that the entire audience bordered on hysteria at the climax of this two-reeler.

"In my opinion, Roach has most promising comedy team on the funny staff. Laurel and Hardy

Record: "A comedy gem—Laurel and Hardy with nothing more than a washing machine and a long, long flight of stone steps on which to work, do actually funny stuff. Laurell and Hardy in their new edition of Roach comedies are stealing the shows quite frequently when matched against feature pictures."

Times: "It is fairly obvious that the two-reelers in which Roach is so felicitously presenting Laurel and Hardy are carefully mapped out from fade-in to fade-out before ever the camera-crank is turned; and the result is uproariously funny. 'Hats Off,' as the latest of the series is entitled, takes the lead as the real laugh-hit of the show."

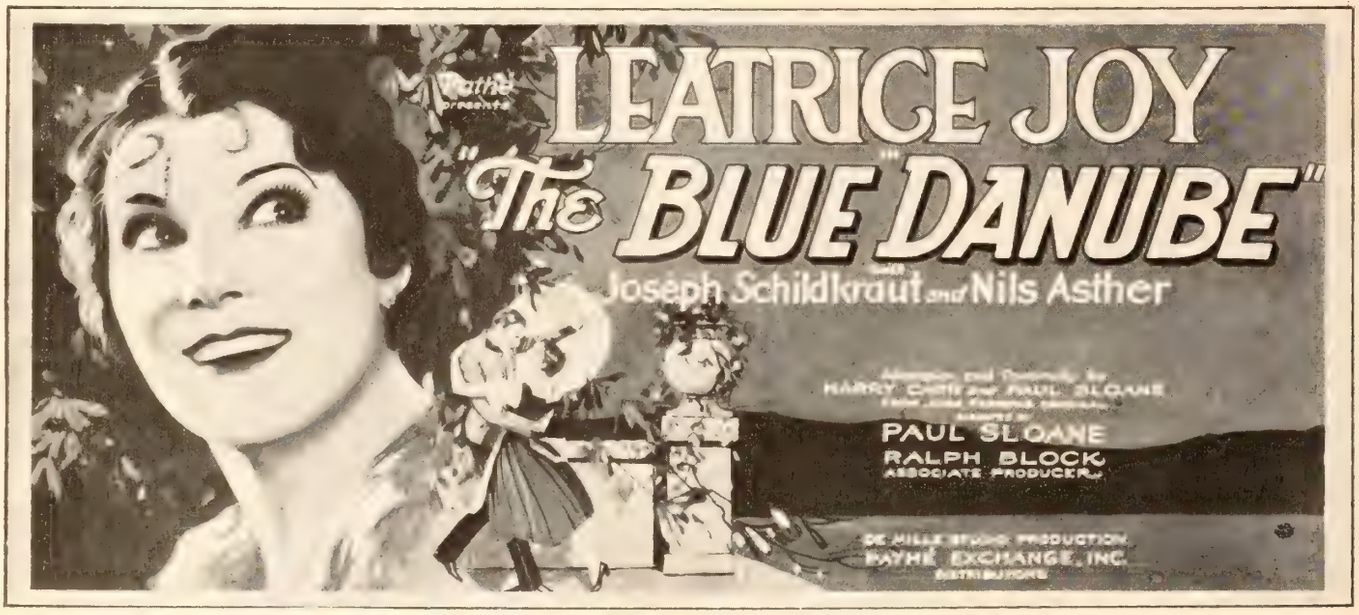
Express: "Just as Stan Laurel's and Oliver Hardy's 'The Battle of the Century' was the custard pie epic, so their new picture, 'Hats Off,' is the screen's first brief for bareheaded men. It is built on the same general lines as the first one, ending up with a street brawl that has only known one or two superiors. There are some real laughs in it, as well as the customary assortment of chuckles."

Times: "A picture of wonderful beauty. Never has the camera been used quite so effectively and artistically as in this subject. It is indeed a picture which, possibly more than any other, reveals the strides made in motion picture camera work. The story is admirably worked out, with splendid suspense."

Roy Press Printers

Preordained

"— the final result of the motion picture on the screen was preordained from the day that Edison got his first sample of Eastman film."*



That was in 1889. And today the film that made motion pictures practical is the film that makes the most of the cinematographer's art and carries all the quality through to the screen—Eastman Film.

Special Ads—Campaign put on by New York gave us a half-page ad the day before opening; a half-page ad the day after opening, and another 800-line ad on the third day of engagement.

A brand-new idea in press-book compilation. Packed with hundreds of seat-selling ideas.

They got behind it in Boston!

¶ Tie-up with the two largest Ice Cream Cos., and we received a very good break as far as advertising is concerned. ¶ Extra space in the newspapers and excellent publicity from all. Tie-up with the largest department store in town with a special display of two large heads of Lloyd, and a monstrous record 6 feet in circumference in Hovey's Store in Summer Street. ¶ Two or three individual Music Stores gave us excellent displays on the records. ¶ The largest laundry and cleaning Co. in Boston gave us the use of their trucks, we furnishing the canvas posters, twenty trucks in number, with Lloyd's face on the side, saying "for SPEEDY service use Lauderman's Laundry and Cleansing Co." ¶ This, in addition to fifty twenty-four sheets, and the calliaphone down town and in the suburban districts. Lobby displays and numerous cuttings on marquees, and 25,000 rotos distributed from house to house and in the theatres.

Part of "teaser" campaign used in Toronto. "It smells like rain" was the keynote carried in all copy and had the whole town wondering.

Vitaphone is Thrilling the World!

A BIG IDEA!

(No. 582—Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation)

THERE'S NOTHING BIGGER THAN A BIG IDEA. THERE'S NO LIMIT TO what you can do with it.

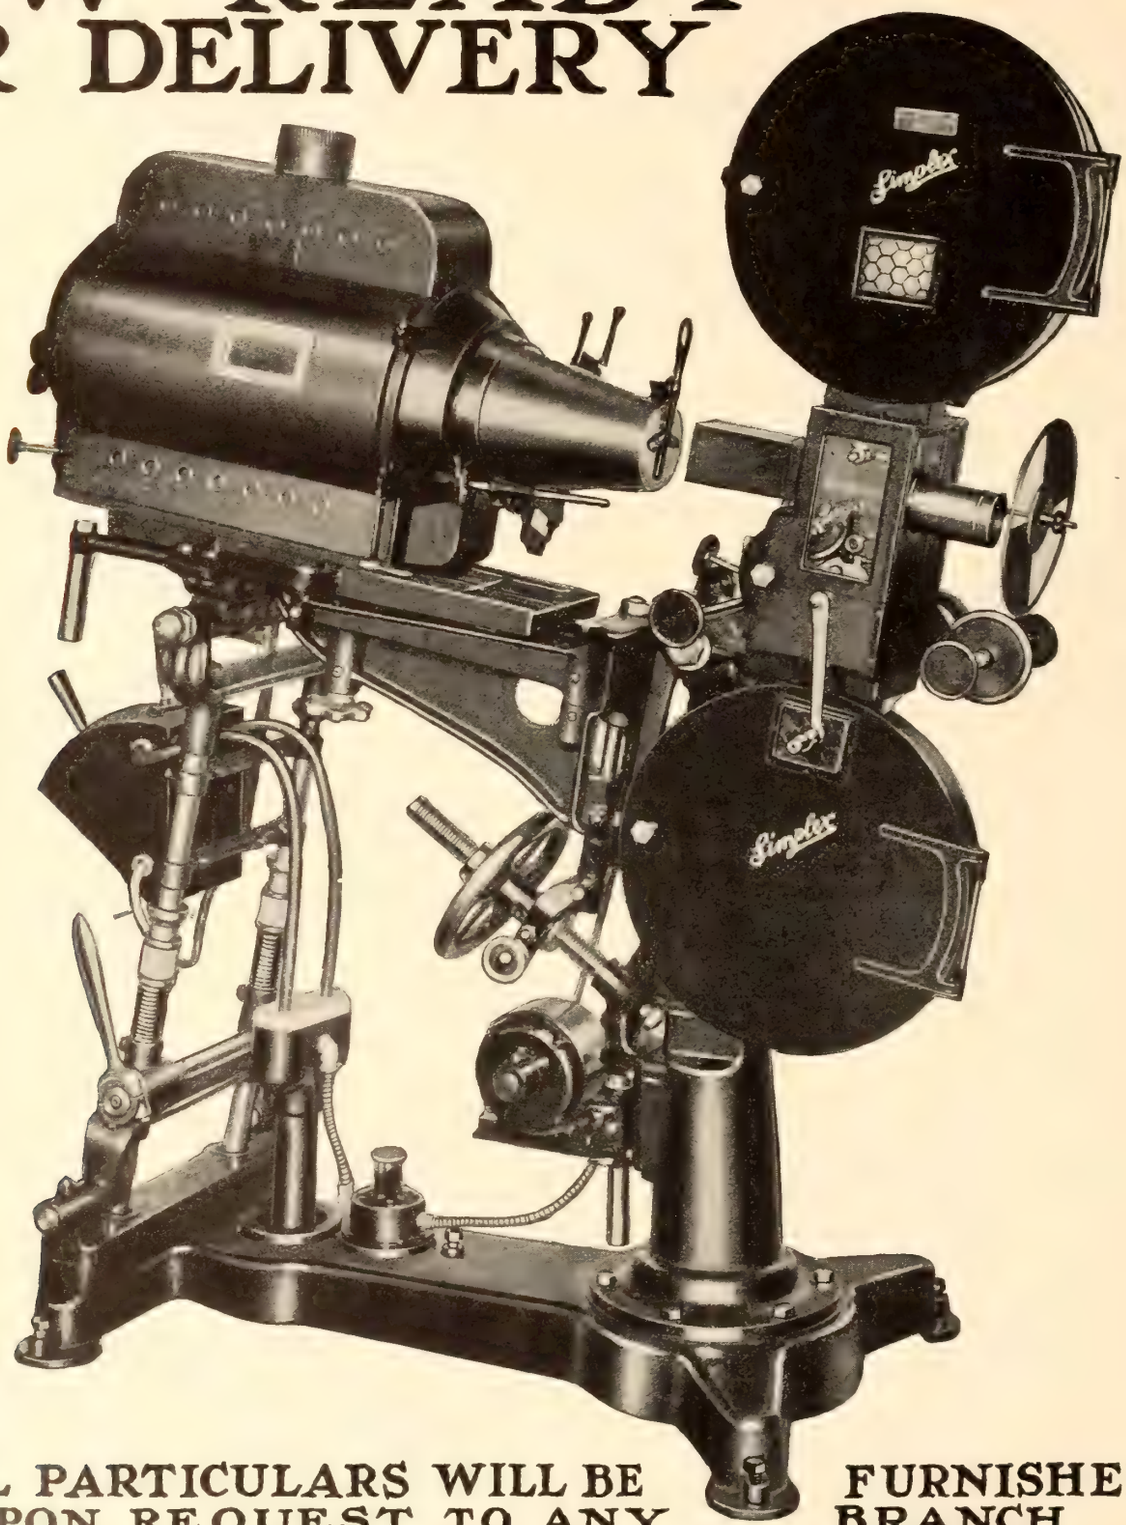
A BIG IDEA WAS THE FOUNDATION ON WHICH WE BUILT "WE Americans"—a picture you are going to remember for many a year. The New York Daily Mirror says this picture has "mental magnitude." That's a flossy way of saying it's a big idea.

THE NEW YORK MORNING TELEGRAPH SAYS "THERE MUST BE AN enormous constructive idea behind it."

NOW, WHEN YOU HAVE A BIG PICTURE BUILT ON A BIG IDEA, YOU can do big things with it. You have a perfect right to call on the biggest citizens of your community to sponsor it.

YOUR MAYOR, FOR EXAMPLE. HE MUST BE A PUBLIC SPIRITED MAN or he would hardly be mayor. Interest him in "We Americans." Tell him what it is all about and his public spirit will do the rest. The president of your local Chamber of Commerce is another man who can help you with such a big idea as this one. The president of your Rotary Club or your Kiwanis Club! The president of your bank!

GET ALL SUCH MEN TOGETHER AND EITHER GIVE THEM A PRIVATE showing of the picture or tell them about it. The Universal press sheets will give you all the stuff to talk about. In your local advertisements, quote what your local celebrities have to say about "We Americans."



DO YOU KNOW WHAT THE NEW YORK DAILY MIRROR SAID ABOUT it? Just listen a moment:—"'WE AMERICANS' HAS LAUGHS, SOBS, DIGNITY, PATRIOTIC APPEAL, HEART INTEREST. EVERYTHING TO MAKE A GREAT MOVIE. IT SHOULD GET EVERYONE, HIGH OR LOW. WHEN YOU SEE IT YOU DON'T FORGET IT—AND YOU DON'T WANT TO. IT'S A LULU!"

GO AFTER IT WITH ALL YOUR MIGHT AND MAIN. TREAT IT AS THOUGH you had to pay more rental for it than any picture you ever showed in your house.

GIVE IT THE INTENSIFIED ADVANCE CAMPAIGN THAT IT DESERVES. It doesn't make a bit of difference what sort of theatre you own or what class of people you cater to, because this is one of those rare occurrences—a picture which hits the spot with simply everybody!

IT'S A BIG IDEA AND BIG IDEAS ARE SCARCE. WHEN YOU GET YOUR claws on a big idea, make it work for you for all it's worth!

An exhibitor* dropped in for a chat with us the other day. He told us some mighty interesting things—one in particular:

In canvassing 125 New England towns in his search for new ideas to use in operating his theatres, this exhibitor found MOTION PICTURE NEWS in every single theatre visited—with one exception.

And that exception was a banker operating a theatre property as a side line.

What's true of New England is true of every other section in the country. You can pick any territory and you will find the NEWS read just as universally as it is in New England.

Pictures Not Sold Until They Are Sold to Public

By William A. Johnston

THE important seasonal announcements of new pictures are ready. Within the next several weeks, Motion Picture News will place before the exhibitor the roster of new product from each important producer; and these will be studied with great interest and weighed with much care. The selection of product is a matter of supreme concern to every house in the land.

Also the sales conventions will shortly be launched, and the selling season put into full sway. One branch of the industry will lay its wares before the other. It is the biggest and most telling operation of the industrial year.

But big and engrossing as it is, we wish to call attention here to one still greater situation that must not be overlooked.

It is that the sale of pictures does not end when exhibitors buy them. Pictures are not sold, until they are sold to the consuming public.

That is the keynote today of the entire business world. No manufacturer of any commodity whatsoever thinks of loading up the dealers' shelves and then losing all interest in his wares. If he quits at this point, he will soon quit business himself. He wants those goods moved to the public in the shortest and most successful order, so that he can send along more goods. Even after they are sold he regards them as still his own goods. And the consequence is that he devotes his every resource to dealer helps and increased consumer demand.

I can safely say that the largest and livest interest of the entire manufacturing world today is just this one issue, namely of increasing the consumption of goods by the public.

The picture business is no exception to this rule. On the contrary, it deals with the most advertisable product in the world today, and the one that most demands advertising, an animate thing the very life blood of which is advertising.

The interest, therefore, of the exhibitor is not going to end after he has read and appraised the box-office value of the various programs offered him. He will want to know just how much the producing company is going to help him get the people into his theatre. And at the end of the season, he will rate the value of his program bookings not merely by the attractions themselves but by the merchandising service that went with them.

The best pictures this industry can produce will not go over as they could go on the strength of the pictures themselves. And between the range of good and poor exploitation by the exhibitor lies a difference in gross to producer and exhibitor alike of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Take the case of "Speedy", the recent Harold Lloyd release, and in my own opinion the best of all his notable productions; at least we will all agree without argument that it has all around and outstanding box-office appeal. It ought to go over of itself, if any picture could go over unaided. In last week's "Key City Reports" in Motion Picture News you will find, however some significant contrasts in "Speedy." Wherever it went over big the report always adds that manager So-and-So gave it a rattling good

News' Theatre Survey Sent Out to 150 Dailies by M. P. T. O. of Ohio

A STRIKING example of the importance of the trade press in the industry's contact with the public is shown in the fact that the recent survey on theatres published in the April 14th issue of Motion Picture News has been sent out to all the daily newspapers in Ohio through an article prepared by P. J. Wood, Business Manager of the M. P. T. O. of that state.

Mr. Wood's letter to William A. Johnston, under date of April 24th, follows:

"Dear Mr. Johnston:

"The article in your issue of last week covering your survey of the theatre situation contained so much valuable information that I have taken the liberty of using the material contained therein as the basis of a new release to the 150 dailies in the State of Ohio.

"When the trade papers of the industry make it a practice to carry constructive stories like these instead of playing up the animosity which exists within the industry, it will be a great step forward."

Following is the article sent out to the Ohio dailies:

"According to P. J. Wood, Business Manager of The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, a survey recently completed by the Motion Picture News shows that during the year ending March 1st, 1928, Ohio led all other states in the number of new theatres completed—namely 128. During this same period 122 theatres were dismantled, or permanently closed, leaving 836 theatres in operation on March 1st, 1928.

"The survey further shows a total of 14,235 theatres in operation throughout the country on March 1st, 1928, of which 5.9 per cent are in Ohio. This percentage is substantially the same as the ratio of Ohio's population to the total population of the country.

"The survey reveals that the building of modern houses of large capacities to replace small out of date and old fashioned theatres is going steadily forward and although there were 884 fewer theatres in operation on March 1st, 1928 than there were on March 1st, 1927, the number of seats was practically the same. This is attributable to the fact that the 2,095 theatres dismantled, or permanently closed were small houses ranging from two to five hundred seats whereas the 1,379 new theatres opened up were of capacities ranging from three hundred to four thousand seats.

"According to Mr. Wood the number of theatres in operation will be lessened every year, but the seatage will increase. This condition will be brought about by the abandonment of the small out-of-date theatre, and the erection of large capacity houses.

"With 1228 theatres New York leads all other states, followed by Illinois with 992, Pennsylvania with 960 and Ohio with 836. Nevada and Delaware have the fewest number of theatres with 24 and 31 respectively."

40 New York Communities Adopt Daylight Saving

According to a statement made at the headquarters of the New York State Conference of Mayors in Albany 40 of the 60 cities in New York state have adopted ordinances this spring favorable to daylight saving from April 29 to the last Sunday in September. So far as can be learned no attempt was made by exhibitors in these cities toward defeating the ordinance. A number of other cities will operate under daylight saving for shorter periods. These include Canandaigua, where daylight saving will run from May 29 to September 29; Lockport, during June, July and August; Jamestown, from June 3 to September 9; Little Falls, Oneida, Rochester, Lockport and Rome.

It is understood that about twenty cities will continue on Standard time this summer. About thirty incorporated villages in New York will also have daylight saving this summer, from April 29 to the last Sunday in September. Ilion will run from May 8 to September 25, and East Rochester from May 30 to September 29.

St. Louis Amusement Co. Passes Quarterly Dividend

Because of the damage wrought to its theatre during the tornado catastrophe which overswept St. Louis last September damaging several of its theatres, the board of directors of the St. Louis Amusement Company, a subsidiary of the Skouras Bros., have decided to pass the customary quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on the Class A stock of the company. In announcing the decision the board stated that normal business has been resumed and that within a reasonable time the company expects to resume payments on dividends.

Several Important Topics Before Philly Convention

Among the topics for discussion which will confront the three-day convention of exhibitor units of Eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware which will be held in Philadelphia beginning Sunday will be competition from non-theatrical sources, percentage bookings, the Brookhart measure and the new uniform contract which is effective the first of May.

New Massachusetts T. O. Body Holds First Meet

The Allied Theatre Owners of Massachusetts, an association in process of organization under the direction of Edward J. Farrell, held its first meeting last Wednesday, and appointed committees to draw up by-laws, to select headquarters and to make other recommendations for a formal organization meeting to be held later, when officers will be elected.

Birmingham Doesn't Want Sunday Movies

Sunday motion pictures met defeat this week in Birmingham, Ala., in a referendum election by 3,000 votes. More than 20,000 persons went to the polls to cast the heaviest vote ever recorded in a Birmingham referendum.

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

THE long-heralded screen version of "Abie's Irish Rose" was given its world's premiere at the Forty-Fourth Street theatre, New York, late last week before a distinguished audience.

Daring, indeed, would be the critic who would attempt to foretell what the ultimate box-office fate of this unusual picture is to be. Remembering the almost universal panning which greeted the stage version from the New York newspaper critics—after which the play proceded to run for years—makes the prophet's role dubious.

Judged as a roadshow, the picture must be classified as very different from the films that have scored big from this angle. It does not have the spectacular features that can be "circused," and which the roadshow experts deem necessary for great success.

As a picture house regular attraction, it unquestionably will score, on its own merits as well as because of the tremendous exploitation value resulting from the play. The title itself will count heavily even among those who never saw the stage version—and plenty of people did—some 18,000,000, according to the Anne Nichols offices.

In its present form "Abie's Irish Rose" runs more than two hours, and is principally comedy. Dominating the acting is Jean Hersholt, with other principals—Charles Rogers, Nancy Carroll, J. Farrell MacDonald, Bernard Gorcey, Ida Kramer, Nick Cogley, Camillus Pretal—doing good work.

The direction by Victor Fleming is, on the whole, good.

THE importance of the "sound movie" is emphasized almost weekly, the latest announcement being from First National, which plans to synchronize pictures via the Firnatone process, with the Victor Talking Machine Company in charge of the making of records.

It is significant also that Paramount has renewed the contract of Roy Pomeroy, who is at work on a device for that company.

The "talking picture," as it is called, has come to stay. More than that—as The News pointed out months ago—it bids fair to revolutionize the production of pictures, and to alter materially the scope of picture exhibition.

The industry is now only in the first stage of this revolutionary development; but that it is revolutionary there can be no doubt.

A SPECIAL cable to The New York Times from Paris April 25 said: "The first official move by the American film industry to withdraw from the French market as a protest against the new four-to-one quota regulations probably will be made Saturday when the Paramount Company is expected to announce suspension of all further trade shows for the 1928-1929 season. Unless concessions are made by the French Government all other American companies will immediately follow the lead of the Paramount and the entire American film industry will close down in France except for the carrying out of old contracts.

"The adverse turn in the situation does not come as a surprise to the majority of the American moving picture men here (in Paris). They have been of the opinion right along that M. Herriot, Minister of Public Instruction, would not accept the proposals made to him by Will H. Hays. These proposals were forwarded to M. Herriot in Lyons last Saturday, accompanied by a request for a definite answer before Monday.

"Fixing of the date was interpreted by many as a sort of ultimatum, since it was known that Mr. Hays intended to sail for home two days after the expiration of the time limit."

At the Paramount offices in New York, when inquiry was made by Motion Picture News, it was said that nothing was known of the reported move to quit France.

The American attitude was stated by one of the high officials of the industry to be this:

The American companies will not submit to duress in the French situation. In other words, they cannot agree to take an arbitrary number of French pictures in return for the showing of American films in France. The right of the French to make restrictions, based upon national problems, is fully recognized by the Americans, but the attempted forcing of film reciprocity by the French is regarded as out of line with all fair trade practices.

IT was further pointed out that the American industry stands ready to bring French pictures here upon their entertainment merits, but not under duress.

In other quarters, the present French situation is regarded as "political," with the Americans, on one side, and the French, on the other, engaged in jockeying for position. These observers would not be surprised if the situation were finally worked out satisfactorily to both.

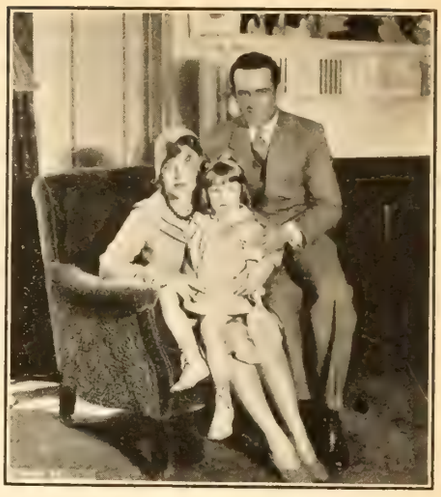
exploitation; and where some other and inferior attraction got the advertising play, even "Speedy" was forced into second place.

In this connection I want to call attention to some exploitation advertising on this same picture in this issue of the News. It is the kind of advertising we believe in and are struggling to promote. Briefly, it tells exhibitors how other exhibitors are putting over the picture and calls attention to the excellent campaign book on "Speedy"—excellent because the exploitation ideas emanate directly from exhibitors themselves.



We shall have, in this same connection of exploitation helps for exhibitors—in particular, the exhibitor in the smaller town and city—a new department, to be announced very shortly.

"Supervisor" Angle Looms Big

Executives Differ on Question of Responsibility for Productions, Many Favoring Director

By EDWIN SCHALLERT

Editor of The Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—Whatever the changes that take place in pictures in the near future, the question of supervision is likely to be much argued. There are those who look for a complete return to the old system of actor, writer and director, with the responsibility placed directly on the last-named by the executive office.

The name supervisor seems irksome. Louis B. Mayer recently condemned it in talking to me, and said it should be changed to "sympathizer." The duties of the supervisor, according to Mr. Mayer, should be comparable to those of a baseball coach. "He is not equipped with the talent to bat the ball himself or steal the bases, but he should be able to encourage the actual players in the game to do this."

"As far as I am concerned," Irving Thalberg told me shortly before leaving for Europe, "there is no such word as 'supervisor.' It is a vastly abused term. It is applied to anyone who sits at a desk and oversees. That's not a supervisor at all in the picture sense.

"There is a point where someone from the outside has to step in and give advice regarding the making of a picture, but it is not for anyone to meddle in a production that is progressing satisfactorily. A picture should be produced with the idea that is determined to be satisfactory at the outset and it should not be changed unless it is absolutely proven that there is something wrong with it.

"The thing that seems funny to me is the great mystery made about producers and supervisors. We're all in the same business together, and working for a common end, and that is to go out to tell a story to the public that is interesting and entertaining. No one man can do it alone; it needs the well-coordinated efforts of everybody. It isn't any one man that counts, it's the picture that counts."

Watterson Rothacker is very positive in his support of the supervisor system, which has worked successfully of late at First National.

"I believe this—that as a rule a director's opinion, a star's opinion or a story writer's opinion on the artistic merit of a story represents a more dependable opinion than that of the one not trained in any of these things. Nevertheless I do think that in some cases, perhaps a lot of cases, executives, who are not actors, and who are not directors, but are accepted as understanding motion pictures, from the executive standpoint, can helpfully criticize. However, you can't go ahead and make a group analysis and arrive at anything but a theory.

Supervisor Relieves Director

"A good supervisor can relieve the director of a thousand and one distracting details. He should be sufficiently story-wise to secure material for future productions, and get this before the production head for his decision. He should be able to coordinate everything under this supervision without directly interfering. He should have a judicial and selective sense, in addition to being a diplomat."

Mr. Rothacker also projected some interesting thoughts regarding current difficulties with pictures.

"The trouble with the picture business is that it is either running at top speed or low speed. If you once set a program for the year, the thing to do would be to operate in the same fashion as with any other factory—lay out your work so you will have a comfortable regularity of flow rather than spasmodic lulls or rushes. Such lulls and rushes are destructive to normal enterprise, and are equally destructive to the morale of artists.

"We are coming somewhere near to achieving this, but we can't lay it out as one could if we were dealing in ordinary manufactured products. An artistic output presents certain obstacles. Within the bounds of practicability perhaps, there can be an even flow of product, and the flow should be regulated, but you will never have the ideal condition in regard to pictures, because there are a thousand and one things to contend with not encountered in any other industry.

"For example there might be four or five pictures running along at the same time and they might have been planned to end at the same time. But when one is near completion it would be discovered that it had greater possibilities than anticipated. That would change the whole aspect of things. There must be sufficient elasticity. It would be valueless, for example, to turn out a production of mediocre quality, and then console ourself with the fact that it was under the budget."

Rothacker Talks Economics

Speaking of the economic situation, Mr. Rothacker said:

"An arbitrary cut in salaries doesn't mean anything. It would be better to fire the people that are 100 per cent wrong, and raise the others 10 per cent. You'd still be 90 per cent to the good.

"As regards the salaries paid to stars, up to a certain point there is a limit as to what can be paid. Outside of that money paid to stars, directors and supervisors there must be some for that much discussed item the overhead.

"Overhead perhaps should mostly be placed under the Follies of 1926. But just the same it's reality. Where there's an investment, there is decline in physical values. We pay for experimenting. We pay for bad guesses. It is overhead just as with a factory. Depreciation on material. Interest on the investment. Then there is the selling and exploitation. The overhead in the picture business is the same as the overhead in the salt business or any other business.

"We have plenty of critics of the financial side of the picture industry today who didn't pay much attention to it in the beginning. Nobody worried about this business when it looked like a loser. Now they all want to get aboard the band wagon."

Production Showing Improvement

Hollywood production is showing steady improvement. It is a year without the conventional roseate predictions, but one of plenty of possibilities. It is the sort of period from which a number of good attractions may emanate, but the very finest ones can at this time only with extreme difficulty be conjectured. Especial attention will for this reason center on forthcoming announcements of programs at conventions of sales forces.

A list of films distinguished by some noteworthy interest include the following:

"The Patriot," starring Emil Jannings, and directed by Ernst Lubitsch.

"The Trail of Ninety-Eight" already showing in New York, and shortly to open in various other large centers.

"The Godless Girl," Cecil B. De Mille's exposition of atheism versus religion.

F. W. Murnau's "The Four Devils."

"Abie's Irish Rose."

All of these will probably be of road-show classification.

To them may be added specials like "Lilac Time," starring Colleen More; "The Battle of the Sexes," which D. W. Griffith is now directing; "The Show Boat," "The Woman Disputed," starring Norma Talmadge; "The Divine Woman," with Greta Garbo; "The Divine Lady," starring Corinne Griffith; "Under Southern Skies," "Hell's Angels" and a few others. Several of these are still to be started.

I hear much about "The Patriot." Those who have seen the early previews say that it is a perfect picture—one of the greatest in acting, direction and story that has yet come to the screen. This is not difficult to imagine, what with the combined Lubitsch Jannings talents.

"The Four Devils" and "The Godless Girl" are still to be completed, although the latter is virtually in shape. Of "Abie's Irish Rose" I have already spoken in a previous article, though it might be well to reiterate the opinion then expressed that it is going to be a sure-fire and big money-maker. Of "The Trail of Ninety-Eight" much has been told already in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and a personal view of it on the screen but bears out the prophecies that it will go splendidly everywhere.

Economically the situation in the studios has not changed materially. There are fewer mistakes being made, but at the same time with a few exceptions no one is taking any very hazardous chances. It is becoming a recognized theory in the colony that only the large organizations can afford to venture into experiments.

Ohio Exhibitor Arbiters Will Not Act in Absence of Defendant

NEW angles are arising regularly in connection with cases to be presented before arbitration boards. From Cleveland comes word that Ohio exhibitor arbitration board members decline to act on any case at which the exhibitor defendant is not present. This stand was taken this week when J. J. Harwood, Meyer Fine and M. B. Horwitz, board members, declined to act in the absence of defendants. A recent ruling declared action can be brought against arbitrators by the defendant exhibitor in event he is absent when his case is arbitrated.

Out in California the Allied Industries, Northern California exhibitor unit, has decreed that no cases involving non-members will be arbitrated by organization members. Notice to this effect has been served by Thomas D. Van Osten, business manager of the association.

Keen Competition Seen In Talking Films

Western Electric and Radio Corporation Devices Being Installed in Many Houses

WITH talking moving pictures becoming more firmly entrenched each week and theatres all over the United States filing their orders for equipment to handle this product competition along these lines is developing with gigantic strides, and promises to grow keener as the weeks pass. One by one the larger producing companies are making their tieups with synchronizing machines, the latest being First National and Victor Talking Machine Company for the production of talking pictures to be known as Firnatone productions. These pictures are to be handled under Western Electric patents through that company's subsidiary, Electrical Research Products Company.

The Radio Corporation of American recently announced Photophone as ready for the market, and its intention to supply the equipment to theatres, churches, schools and the home. The Western Electric and Radio Corporation equipments are not interchangeable, so both are bending every effort to push installments.

Additional announcements of production tieups following that of First National with Victor are expected shortly, as each of the leading companies feels it necessary to synchronize sound with their pictures. It is understood several deals are pending for the licensing of companies to use the Western Electric Company patents.

Electrical Research Products Company, subsidiary to Western Electric Company, manufactures the equipment for both Vitaphone and Movietone, and its device and patents are open to all producers. It is reported that there are upwards of 250 theatres already equipped to produce sound with the Western Electric equipment, and that another 150 orders have been filed for the equipment. With the average output of 60 systems a month, this carries the production schedule of the company at capacity up to June 1st.

The Radio Corporation of America, whose devices were not ready for marketing as early as those of the Western Electric Company, is now ready to proceed at full speed, but is under the handicap of 250 theatres already equipped and the 150 additional orders placed. However, the field is a wide one and the Radio Corporation expects eventually to do a tremendous business with installations in the home, as well as the theatres, churches and schools.

Frank Currier, Actor, Dies at 70

FRANK J. CURRIER, a veteran of the stage and screen, died last Monday evening, April 23, at his home in Beverly Hills, after having suffered for ten days from blood poisoning in his right hand. After three blood transfusions, he had improved considerably but a sudden turn for the worse came and he could not rally.

He started acting at the age of 3. After 35 years of work on the stage, during which time he played with many of the footlights great, he became of prominence in the screen world. A widow, a son and two sisters survive him.

German Censors Active During February

There were 38 long feature films censored in Germany during the month of February, 1928, of which 22 were German made and 16 foreign (11 from America), as compared with 18 domestic and 27 foreign in January, 1928, and 26 domestic and 26 foreign in December, 1927, state advices to the Department, Washington, D. C., from Trade Commissioner George R. Canty, Paris.

The total length of all films censored during February was 158,683 meters, as against 175,502 meters in January, 1928, and 198,854 meters in December, 1927. Of the total length of 158,683 meters, 87,587 meters, or 55 per cent, were feature films, and the remainder, or 45 per cent, were educationals and newsreels. The German share of the total number of feature films censored during February, 1928, was 58 per cent.

Comerford Plans Erection of 13 New Theatres

This year 13 new houses will be added to the Comerford chain, according to plans announced by the Scranton, Pa., organization. They will be in addition to those already in construction at Williamsport, Sunbury, Wilkes-Barre, Scranton, Rome, N. Y., and Parsons, Pa.

A $1,200,000 real estate deal, involving transfer of properties on Public Square, East Market and South Washington Streets in Wilkes-Barre, has been consummated. The property, owned by Wilkes-Barre Deposit and Savings Bank, passes into the hands of the Comerford company. The sale of the Savoy Theatre building to the bank has already been made.

New Quebec Organization Is Incorporated

Announcement is made at Montreal, Quebec, of the incorporation of an organization known as The Theatre and Cinema Association of the Province of Quebec, with headquarters at Montreal, without share capital.

Among the stated objects of the association is the aim to carry on educational work in behalf of theatre members. The association will also conduct charity performances and is authorized to buy, sell, rent or produce moving pictures. Another object of the company is to encourage Canadian pictures and "in a general way, to promote tolerance, moderation, harmony and peace religiously and nationally speaking." Maurice Dugas is named as organizer.

In view of recent stringent legislation in Quebec, the new association will have plenty of scope for its activities.

Daylight Saving Approved in Montreal Elections

It never rains but it pours in the case of the exhibitors of Montreal, Quebec. Following the passing of the Quebec law prohibiting the admission of all children to theatres; the scrap over Sunday shows; the adoption of a law providing for the censoring of all theatre posters for the Province of Quebec and other rules and regulations, the rate payers of Montreal formally approved daylight saving in the recent civic elections. This is the first time that a vote on daylight saving had ever been taken in Canada's largest city and the referendum carried by a large majority.

Castle Theatre in Guelph, Ont., Destroyed by Fire

A serious theatre fire occurred at Guelph, Ontario, when the well-known Castle Theatre was destroyed along with four stores in the building, the loss being $115,000. Flames were discovered at 2.15 a.m. on April 18 by a passing constable, no one being in the theatre at the time. The building was quickly gutted.

The owner of the Castle was Dave McMullen, a well-known exhibitor, and the theatre was operated under the auspices of Famous Players. Insurance on the building and equipment was $60,000.

Censoring Language Brings Suit

Vitagraph Files Bill Against Board Questioning Right to Censor Vitaphone Accompaniment

IN a suit filed in the Court of Common Pleas No. 5 in Philadelphia, the Vitagraph Company challenges the right of the Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censors to censor language used in speaking devices employed with the showing of motion pictures.

Taking the stand that the law authorizing censorship applies only to pictures projected by light, and therefore could not be interpreted to include vocal accompaniments, Vitagraph submitted a film for censorship but did not submit the dialogue which was to accompany it on the Vitaphone. The board refused to examine the film because dialogue had not been submitted.

The bill in equity filed by Vitaphone sets forth that on April 9 the censors notified exhibitors and distributors that all applications for examination of films filed with the board must state whether the film is to be exhibited in conjunction with any mechanical device or by use of persons for utterance of language and if so the language must be submitted to the censor board.

Vitaphone asked the court for an injunction against Harry L. Knapp, Mrs. Edward C. Niver and Harry Starr Richardson, the three members of the board to restrain them from enforcing any rule requiring the submission of language reproduced by mechanical means and used in connection with motion pictures.

For approximately 18 months, the complainant asserts, a large number of moving picture films have been submitted by it to the censors intended to be shown with accompanying language, but the Board of Censors did not make any demand for the submission of the language before the notice of April 9.

The complainant further asserts that "by virtue of the form of the records any eliminations ordered by the Board of Censors would render them useless, causing the company to suffer loss of $10,000 a week. It is explained that the installation of apparatus for reproducing language costs $7,500 for each installation and that persons installing them agreed to pay $100 a week to the company. It is said that there are about 100 installations made or under contract and that the Vitagraph Company would suffer a great loss if the action of the Board of Censors is upheld by the Courts.

It is averred by the complainant that the new rule is without legal justification and arbitrary and that its enforcement would constitute an abuse of discretion on the part of the defendant. It is further averred that if the statutes of Pennsylvania were constructed to permit the adoption of the rule for the censorship of the language produced on the Vitaphone, such construction would be in violation of the Constitution of both the State of Pennsylvania and the United States.

The Fox Film Corporation, operating the "Movietone" system, it is said, will submit to the censors a film which is to be accompanied vocally without the dialogue and if examination is refused a test suit similar to that of Vitagraph will probably be filed.

Oppose Brookhart Bill

Arkansas Unit Commends Senator But Advances Three Reasons Against Measure in Present Form

M. A. LIGHTMAN as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas has addressed a communication to Senator Joe T. Robinson of that state and a copy of the communication to Senator Caraway, offering three reasons why the Brookhart bill should not be passed in its present form. The letter commends Senator Brookhart of Iowa for "a sincere desire to be of assistance to the independent exhibitors of the United States," and, "to remedy an evil that exists in our industry—block booking."

It then says in part:

"The bill invites opposition in every city, town and hamlet in the United States, even where opposition would mean utter ruin to both parties. This would result because any person desiring to interest an inexperienced person to build a theatre in a small community, could very easily do so by advising him that he could get any picture that is made, and, according to the Brookhart bill, this is absolutely true. Practically no other branch of industry is controlled in similar manner, nor could they exist if they were.

"Another serious menace to the exhibitor would be the fact that every moving picture offered for sale would be handled in the same manner that so-called 'specials' are now handled, and this would create an auctioning of every picture that is made where there is a competitive situation. In other words the bill provides that every picture be sold to the highest bidder. Have you ever heard of any business in the world that has to buy every item that it has for sale at auction?

"A third objection to the bill is that the Federal Trade Commission would have the right to settle every controversy that might arise in the event of disputed valuations. There are times when this would delay the exhibition of a picture and impair its value. In other words, our business is of a nature that very often the age of the picture has a great deal to do with the value of it.

"We fully appreciate the good intention of Senator Brookhart, and also agree with him that block booking is a serious handicap, but we do not believe that the present bill will accomplish enough good in relieving us of this evil to offset the bad that it will do, as outlined above."

Daylight Saving Defeated in Illinois Town

Daylight saving was defeated by a major vote of 1,200, after one of the hardest campaigns waged at Elgin, Ill., in many years. Newspaper ads, broadcasting and trailers in motion pictures theatres were used to advantage by the anti-daylight savings campaigners, headed by Jules J. Rubens, president of Great States Theatres, Inc., who took a very active part in the fight. The results were very gratifying to the theatre men, who expect much better business during the summer months, due to their adhering to standard time.

1st Division Purchases Land for New Studio

FIRST DIVISION, now making its pictures at the Metropolitan Studio, will next year erect a motion picture plant on Ventura boulevard, about five miles beyond Universal City. Three acres of land in the new studio colony adjacent to the new Mack Sennett studio under construction have been purchased by First Division. Raymond and Lepitz, architects, are preparing plans and it is expected the studio will be in operation by next May. Work on the project is to start this summer.

Paramount to Develop Pomeroy Device

THE talking picture device sponsored by Roy J. Pomeroy, which is used to provide the sound effects for "Wings" will be developed by Paramount, which has renewed Pomeroy's contract. He has been connected with the company for six years.

Victor Schertzinger has been signed to a long-term contract to take charge of production of the musical scores made with the Paramount device. Laboratories and sound-proof rooms are now being constructed for this work. All of the Paramount features will be synchronized with the device, it is explained.

Texas M. P. T. O. Meets in Dallas May 8 and 9

The M. P. T. O. of Texas will hold the convention in Dallas May 8th and 9th at the Baker Hotel. The election of officers will be an important feature of the convention, and present plans call for the election of 16 district directors in place of the usual seven. This increase will be made to give a better representation and will also afford each of the 16 districts a director. A large attendance is expected, due to several controversies pertaining to the exhibitors' business.

Townspeople of Ames, Ia., to Vote on Sunday Shows

Sunday movies will come before the people of Ames, Iowa, for their favor or disfavor on April 30, the new city council of the town having decided to bring the question to a vote. Joe Benjamin Gerbracht and Harry Weinberg, president of the Commonwealth Theatres Company, which has three theatres in Ames, have worked hard to bring about a more friendly feeling toward the Sunday shows and feel optimistic for the success of the measure.

Hal Roach Studios Have Finished Current Product

Sapiro Tells Attitude Toward Producers

Independent Exhibitors Organization Plans Cooperation with National and Independent Companies

AARON SAPIRO, president of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, Inc., of New York, has issued statements telling the organization's attitude toward National producing companies and the independents, in which he promises every co-operation with both.

With regard to the National companies the Sapiro statement says in part: "We expect to add to their development through our purchasing power in the same way in which we expect to grow ourselves, by reason of increased business of our members. Our relations with the big companies will be wholly co-operative."

The statement regarding the independents is in part as follows: "It is our policy that as an organization we will support as many of the so-called independent producers as make good pictures. Our policy will be deliberately to work with them. We will encourage the independent producer by purchase and otherwise. It is pertinent to say that our first study among our own group in specific theatres has shown that some of our members have made more money out of independent pictures than they have from the product of the larger companies.

A third statement by Sapiro concerns the gossip regarding the attitude of Metro and the organization toward each other. Regarding this, Mr. Sapiro said:

"I have heard remarks attributed to the local chiefs of the Metro-Loew iterests that they deliberately intend to boycott this association and have been actually urging exhibitors to avoid this association, with suggestions of special favors if they stay out. I do not believe these things, not only because I do not want to believe them, but because such action would be so unwise from such clever men. These rumors probably have no basis in fact, but I make this statement in order to stop any further circulation of the kind of talk that embitters men against the Metro-Loew concern."

From a source close to Mr. Sapiro the word comes that his organization will eventually be extended nationally and that he will be named National president. The tendency seems to be along those lines, with organizations being launched or preliminary steps being taken in Pittsburgh, Boston, Buffalo, New Jersey and out in Seattle on the Pacific Coast.

Preliminary steps were taken toward the organization of a Western New York Association at Buffalo when a meeting was held at the Hotel Statler on April 18, with fifty representative exhibitors present. This organization is under the guidance of Sidney B. Pfeifer, prominent Buffalo attorney. The gathering was addressed by Mr. Sapiro, who explained the purposes and functions of the body.

The Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of New York has addressed a communication to all producing and distributing companies asking them to confer with the association with regard to the sale of product. With the communication was enclosed a list of the members of the organization and a copy of the contract the organization has with its members. It is a part of the conditions of this contract that the exhibitor agrees to do all his buying through the organization and will not buy any product separately. A series of meetings is being arranged with producer and distributor groups.

Paramount Has Record First Quarter

PARAMOUNT FAMOUS LASKY CORPORATION estimates its profit, after all charges and taxes, including its undistributed share of earnings of the Balaban and Katz Corporation, a 65 per cent owned subsidiary, for the first quarter of 1928 to be $2,250,000.00, which amounts to $3.27 per share on 687,379 shares of common stock outstanding.

A comparison of the same quarters' earnings for 1925, 1926 and 1927 follows: 1928—$2,250,000; 1927—$2,067,000; 1926—$1,649,000; and 1925—$1,352,000.

The profit for the first quarter of 1928, estimated as above, is approximately 9 per cent greater than the corresponding quarter of 1927, the previous record first quarter for the company.

Offer Reward for Arrest of Seattle Bombers

A reward of $2,500.00 for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons guilty of perpetrating any of the several bomb outrages against downtown non-union theatres in Seattle, Washington during the recent weeks was offered last week by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington, through their executive secretary, James M. Hone.

Declaring it to be a time when other than police action is necessary to curb the outrages that have wrought thousands of dollars worth of damage to the State, Palace Hip and Embassy Theatres, as well as adjoining properties, the M. P. T. O. W. went firmly on the stand that their funds are maintained for just such a purpose as this emergency.

Free Shows Menace Ponca City Showmen

Theatrical and moving picture men of Ponca City, Okla., are faced with reduced theatre grosses because of free shows, which Lew Wentz, millionaire oil man, offers four times a week. The business of Fred Pickrel, a local exhibitor, has been hard hit because of this form of competition and he has been forced to close two of his theatres. The recent Oklahoma City convention recently discussed the matter, but has not taken any action thus far.

New Plan for Layout of Runs Suggested

Would Fix Definite Play Dates for Subsequent Runs Prior to First Showings

STANLEY SUMNER, manager of the University Theatre at Cambridge, Mass., has mapped a plan for a layout of runs on pictures for the Metropolitan area of Boston. It provides definite playdates and protection for first and second run houses and gives subsequent runs the privilege of fixing definite playdates during or just prior to first run Boston showings.

According to the Sumner plan the picture showing would be divided into six runs with definite playdates set for each run. In entering into contracts the exhibitor would buy his particular run and have the privilege of dickering for priority as at present, provided he books within the particular time specified by the run he buys.

As an illustration of how the Sumner plan works a picture would be booked into the Boston first runs, the Metropolitan, State or Keith-Albee, for April 1 to 7 and allows those houses twenty-one days' protection. This brings the second run dates from April 29 to May 5 and allows them seven days' protection. It provides these showings for Allston, first Cambridge showings, Scolley, Fields, etc. Third run showings would be available the week of May 13 to 19 in Newton, Waltham, second Cambridge showings and Roxbury. Fourth runs would be from May 20 to 26 in Needham, third Cambridge, first Somerville and Hyde Park and fifth runs from May 27 to June 2 in Dedham, Arlington, second Somerville and Watertown. Sixth runs would be available anywhere from June 3 to 9.

By the definite selection of his playdate the exhibitor would be obligated to play within the week specified or lose his priority privilege, but this would greatly simplify the booking problem for the distributor and assure regular play on pictures contracted for.

The plan would of necessity, require the booking of theatres outside the Metropolitan area before and during the protection of the first and second run and after the peak represented by the third, fourth and fifth Metropolitan runs.

Each of the outside theatres after the second run would know within which particular week they must book the picture in order to enjoy priority over competing theatres. This priority privilege is dependent only upon the theatre booking the picture when due, though the house is under no obligation to book at this time, but failure to do so does not affect subsequent runs.

Mr. Sumner has sent an outline of his plan to a majority of the exchanges and to a number of exhibitors as a suggested means of simplifying a problem that is an ever increasing trouble to both exhibitor and distributor.

Film Center Under Way

New Thirteen Story Building Being Erected in New York to House Exchanges

NEW YORK is to have a Film Center Building, which is now being erected by Film Center, Inc., of which Abe N. Adelson is president and principal owner. It will cover the entire east block front on Ninth Avenue from 44th to 45th street and will be thirteen stories high. Completion has been promised for January, 1929 by the R. H. Howes Construction Company, contractors for the enterprise. S. W. Straus & Co., have underwritten an issue of $1,900,000 first mortgage, 6 per cent real estate bonds of Film Center, Inc., secured by land and building to be erected.

The building is designed to serve as a film exchange and office building, permitting the concentration in one place of practically all the receiving and delivery of motion picture films for New York and vicinity. It will provide facilities, not only for producers and distributors, but for allied film industries as well.

According to the plans of Buchman & Kahn, architects, Film Center will have 18,000 square feet of floor space on each of the thirteen floors. Every modern facility for the handling and shipping of films will be provided. All of the city departments having contact with the film industry are said to have passed on location, plans and type of construction and have given their approval.

A large number of vaults will be provided on every floor. The installation of these vaults will add materially to the cost of construction, as every vault is to be surrounded by a fireproof wall eight inches thick, with a double fire-proof door that automatically closes. They will confine the entire hazard in case of fire to the point of origin. Separate flues from each vault will carry all fumes to the roof, while a specially constructed system will provide for a discharge of water greatly in excess of the average sprinkler system.

Another innovation will be the thermostatic control of the heating system in rooms devoted to the shipping of films where night work is essential. Heat will be turned on as needed and automatically shut off each hour. This will prevent wastage of heat when rooms are not in use.

Leases are reported signed already for large units in the building by Metro-Goldwyn Film Corporation, Universal Pictures Corporation and First National. They will move their exchanges there in January. Spear & Company have been appointed agents for the building.

"U" City Improvements Now in Progress

A PROGRAM of improvements—new buildings, stages, roads, etc.—is now being carried out at Universal City in preparation for production activities of the new season. The shut-down of the studio has made possible the undertaking of work that heretofore had been hindered by production activities.

One of the new improvement features is the construction of a new stage to cover more than two acres, its walls to be removeable and each of them to be constructed so as to represent various periods of history. Permanent lights will be built into the walls and pillars of this new stage. A new unit heating plant will keep all sections of the stage at a uniform temperature. An extensive sprinkler system is also planned. The present stages are to be slightly remodeled, a large addition is planned for the cutting room, several of the streets and roads have been resurfaced and new roads are to be constructed extending to many new parts of the lot.

Fox West Coast Control Stirs Publix, Loew's

Rumor Says Latter Companies May Build Additional Houses if Film Rentals Show Decrease

THERE is considerable speculation on the west coast as to just what is going to happen in the theatre situation, with William Fox now the controlling factor in West Coast Theatres and Publix and Loew's considerably upset over the Fox hold on the coast.

There are various rumors being circulated, even to the extent that Joseph M. Schenck and Louis B. Mayer are discussing a survey of the territory with the idea of livening up the competition if the Paramount and M-G-M rentals show too decided a falling off over those of 1927.

Last year it is said that about 70 per cent of the total rentals paid by the West Coast circuit were divided between Paramount and M-G-M, and speculation is rife as to just what percentage these companies will cut in with Fox now the dominant figure. That the figures will be reduced is a foregone conclusion, though M-G-M and Paramount pictures, as well as those of other companies, will, of course, be shown in the West Coast Theatres. At any rate, it is a certainty that Fox pictures will be given the first call.

The theatre situation on the west coast is a peculiar one and considerably involved, with West Coast operating houses owned by both Publix and Loew's. For instance, Publix owns the Metropolitan and Million Dollar in Los Angeles, both of which are operated by West Coast. Loew's State is also operated by West Coast, which is an equal partner with Loew's in the operating company.

A similar condition exists in the San Francisco territory, where Publix owns the St. Francis, Portola, Granada and California, all of which are operated by West Coast. Loew's Warfield is operated by West Coast, with the latter owning 50 per cent of the operating company.

In addition to the houses already operated by West Coast, Fox is building new and big theatres in both San Francisco and Los Angeles, so he is bound to have first run outlet regardless of any action that might be taken by Publix and Loew's. San Francisco and Los Angeles are not the only cities on the west coast in which complications have developed. In Seattle and Portland, West Coast, Publix and Loew's are jointly interested in two new houses that only recently were opened.

18 For First Division

Company Will Produce Own Product for Next Season; Also Planning Own Studio

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, president of First Division Distributors, Inc., announces his company will produce eighteen pictures for the coming season and will not depend upon outside producers for product. He also said that work on a new company studio would be started during the summer in the San Fernando Valley, several miles beyond Universal City, and that it was hoped to produce a part of the coming season's product in the new plant.

First Division will have its own contract stars for the pictures announced and will sign up other artists within the next few weeks. A staff of additional directors and writers are also included in the lineup. Two of the pictures on the program will be produced in Europe. These will be special productions and Mr. Goldburg will go abroad to supervise them.

The balance of the pictures that are not made in the company's new studios, will be produced in the Metropolitan Studios in Hollywood and will be in charge of Robert S. Furst and Raymond Wells, respectively treasurer and vice-president of the company. First Division recently consolidated with Furst-Wells Productions.

The pictures announced for the 1928-29 season are:

J. S. Woody Becomes J. R. Grainger's Aide

J. S. WOODY, who has had ten years of experience in the show business, has joined Fox Films as assistant to the general sales manager, James R. Grainger. Mr. Woody was formerly general sales manager of Select Pictures Corporation, general manager of Realart, and president of Associated Exhibitors. He begins work Monday, April 30, on the new program of Fox Films.

Paramount Bans "Dawn" Showing in All of Company Houses

"DAWN," the British-made film based on the death of Edith Cavell, has been banned in all Paramount houses. The company has announced that the picture would not be shown in any theatre which it owns or controls throughout the United States. Adolph Zukor expressed the opinion that it ought not to be shown because it seemed likely to promote ill-feeling between nations. The move by Paramount follows a similar one made by Loew's theatres.

James W. Gerard, former ambassador to Germany, has been active in the fight to prevent the picture being shown in New York and other cities. His conference with Mr. Zukor resulted in the announcement from the Paramount office.

Arch Selwyn, holder of the American rights to "Dawn" has cabled from London to Boris Kaplan, his manager here that May 15 has been decided upon as the date when "Dawn" would have its American premiere at the Times Square Theatre.

D. A. R. Not for Censors

Organization Plans Educating Communities to Want and Support Good Pictures

THE D. A. R. has no thought of motion picture censorship and apparently sees no need for it so long as there are available many worthwhile pictures, it was indicated in the report submitted to the organization at its annual convention April 18, by Mrs. Newton D. Chapman, chairman of the committee on better films. Lists of acceptable pictures are issued monthly by the committee, it was stated, and the committee is working on the plan of educating the community to want and to support the best motion pictures.

The production of state historical pictures is the most important work being performed by the committee, Mrs. Chapman declared. The plan is to have prominent people in each state sponsor a film showing the history of the state, its physical geography, the industrial life of its people, and the public activities, such as roads, schools and hospitals. These pictures are to be shown throughout the country, but are not to be commercialized, and copies would be deposited in the state and national archives and in the D. A. R. library.

The D. A. R. is encouraging motion picture producers to make a film of the life of George Washington, the organization was told.

Mrs. Chapman also dwelt extensively upon developments within the motion picture industry, speaking of the trade practice conference held in New York last October, the cooperation of the public relations department of the Hays organization, the development of pedagogic films, visual education, and the studio committee established in Hollywood.

"It has been my duty frequently to express my opinion, to ask for information, to make specific recommendations, to urge changes or to encourage productions," she declared, "and I have found in every instance courtesy and helpfulness awaiting me in the office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Unbiased opinions and constructive advice have been given me every time I have taken advantage of the open door policy of that association. I earnestly urge each of you to register your opinions and your views—the good, remember, as well as the adverse—with the department of public relations."

Short Subjects Abroad

Double Feature Programs in Foreign Houses Cut Down U. S. Shipments of Short Film

THE style of program popular in foreign motion picture houses is playing havoc with the sale of short subject films abroad, according to a trade bulletin issued by the Department of Commerce in Washington. A large majority of the picture houses are playing the double feature, almost to the exclusion of the short subject.

The type of program popular in most of the moving picture theatres in the United States, consisting of one long feature and two short subject films, is the exception rather than the rule outside of this country, according to the report. The showing of two long feature films makes it impossible to introduce short subjects, and this situation has been reflected in the relatively small footage of this type of film which we ship abroad.

Last year we exported to foreign countries 231,000,000 linear feet of film, 155,000,000 of which went to countries other than European. It is impossible to estimate what part of this footage was made up of short subject pictures, but in comparison with feature films, it is known to have been insignificant. More than 10,000 short subjects, all of which were not separate titles, as the same film often goes to different countries, went to these European markets, the average being around 400 for each country. Canada, Australia and Brazil were the chief customers for the short American film, each taking about 1,500.

As a general rule, the short films which are most popular abroad are those full of action requiring no mental effort to understand. American producers, according to the report, will find it to their advantage in the long run to send to foreign countries only the latest short subjects, having in mind the tastes peculiar to each individual area.

"U" Has 26 in Exchanges for '28-'29 Season

Company in Splendid Production Shape, Ready to Show Features on May 1st

The Laemmle organization is in the unusual and enviable position of having twenty-six of its 1928-29 season features already completed, printed and in the exchanges ready to show exhibitors just as soon as May 1st comes around.

Of the twenty-six completed, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" holds precedence. After a run of 350 performances at the Central Theatre in New York it is ready to go on tour of theatres throughout the country. This production closed its New York career only to admit "The Man Who Laughs" to the Central. The latter, a Victor Hugo classic, is the third Universal has distributed. It will have Mary Philbin and Conrad Veidt in the leading roles. Paul Leni directed.

Others of the twenty-six completed pictures include "The Foreign Legion," with Norman Kerry, Lewis Stone and Mary Nolan, directed by Edward Sloman; "The Michigan Kid," from the Rex Beach story, with Renee Adoree and Conrad Nagel, directed by Irvin Willat; "Give and Take," with George Sidney and Jean Hersholt, directed by William Beaudine; "Lonesome," directed by Paul Fejos, with Glenn Tryon and Barbara Kent; "Home, James," with Laura La Plante, directed by William Beaudine; "Fresh Every Hour," with Glenn Tryon, directed by William Craft; "Jazz Mad," with Jean Hersholt, Marian Nixon and George Lewis; "The Grip of the Yukon," with Francis X. Johnson's Benefit Show Raises Funds for Local Relief Work

A BENEFIT performance staged by Manager Fred E. Johnson of the C. and M. Amusement Company at the Colonial theatre in Cambridge, O., proved one of the most productive sources for supplies of food and wearing apparel for the starving children of Guernsey County, and won the hearty support of those interested in this local charity work.

Johnson's benefit performance was for the children of the town and admission was by contribution of articles of food or clothing or cash. All receipts and supplies were turned over to Probate Judge Schlup for relief work and community kitchens.

The benefit show was a morning matinee which started at 10 o'clock. Children began to arrive at the theatre at 9:15 with their contributions. All had donations for the children in the impoverished area. Many of the children attending the show were sent by their parents with liberal contributions of food stuffs, in addition to 10 cents admission charge. Quite a number of parents or grown-ups accompanied small children, the adults paying the regular admission fee to help in the relief work. One woman having no youngsters to attend the show, went to the theatre lobby, made a liberal food donation, and gave a dollar bill as her part in the work. Others sent supplies and money with neighbor children.

Potatoes were collected and placed into large boxes and baskets, over 8 bushels being received. Apples in large quantities, canned goods including, beans, peas, corn, pears, peaches, tomatoes, soup, and other varieties, sugar, coffee, tea, crackers, loose beans, cereals, onions, prunes, and numerous other eatables were donated. Jellies of all kinds, delicious fruits and preserves were among the donations.

Four reels of funnies and educational movies first shown, were secured through the Cleveland Film Board of Trade. A message received by Manager Johnson said "Shipping F. B. O. comedies from educational exchange. We are glad to co-operate with you in your fine plan to help the unfortunate children in your section. Always feel free to call upon us in situations of this kind."

Everything in Saturday morning's show was donated, including the theatre, help, and entertainment. Over 600 children were present.

Following the movies, three acts of vaudeville were presented.

Catchline Featured in Various Mediums Exploits "The Crowd"

A CATCHLINE based on the title of "The Crowd" was an exploitation feature upon which many advertising ideas were worked out to create interest in the showing of that feature at the Rialto theatre in Tulsa, Oklahoma, recently. The line used in a variety of stunts and co-operative advertising was "Join the Crowd and see 'The Crowd'."

As a street stunt the manager of the Rialto engaged two girls of attractive appearance to distribute novelty envelopes. The girls wore red capes and red caps. The envelopes they distributed contained the following messages:

"Go where 'The Crowd' goes." Bottom corner read: "See Inside." Inside on card, was the following copy: "You are in danger of missing the Season's Best Screen presentation at the Rialto if you miss King Vidor's first picture since 'The Big Parade'—'The Crowd.' Join the crowd and see it." Each envelope was sealed. These young ladies visited the three leading hotels in the city — The Mayo — Tulsa and Ketchum, and their appearance created a great deal of excitement and interest.

The theatre's local camera-man took pictures. This film was made into a trailer which was run at the theatre with the following caption: "See others as they see you in 'The Crowd.'" Each day ten slides were carried on the screen.

Arrangements were made with the Sitterly Department store for three windows on men and women's ready-to-wear apparel, and large poster panels were placed in each window with stills from the picture. Cards carried the following caption: "Join 'The Crowd' of buyers and wear one of the latest Easter creations." This same card was placed in all windows. At the Hollywood Shoe Store, thirty stills of the production were placed in special frames set in all windows,

Atmosphere Lobby Attract Notice to "South Sea Love"

Manager Jack L. Hobby decorated his lobby in a veritable South Sea Island setting that was the talk of the town for "South Sea Love" at the Strand Theatre, Tampa, Fla.

The entire front was a mass of luxuriant green palmettos with the floor of the lobby strewn with pine needles which gave the effect of grass.

On the left side of the lobby was a large illuminated 24-sheet cut-out and on top of the marquee was a shadow box with a muslin cloth front, behind which was a silhouette effect of a hula dancer—using the fan idea to make her shimmy.

The ushers were garbed in white pants and white shirts with blue sashes and orange colored garlands around their necks.

Briefs

PERSONAL endorsement cards, recommending the anniversary show at the Rialto and Plaza theatres in Waterloo, were distributed by ushers at those houses as one of the advance exploitation features used in connection with the 8th anniversary of Alexander Frank as manager of the two houses. The cards were similar to those similarly used by the Butterfield theatres recently and reproduced in this department of the March 31st issue of the NEWS.

KEYS found in a Portland, Ore., theatre, are hung on a board where patrons can see them and claim their property, says "Popular Mechanics Magazine." A sign at the top of the board reads: "Is this your key?" Since the introduction of the service, scores of grateful patrons have derived benefit from the novel installation through the recovery of their keys.

JAMES O. CHERRY, manager of the Melba theatre, Dallas, recently put on a radio entertainment which exploited his showing of "The Student Prince" and brought applause to the broadcasting station WFAA of the Dallas News and Journal. The radio program included an orchestral concert by the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, which served as a background for a running story of the picture with interpolated dialogue between the characters of the Prince and Kathi, impersonated by the station director and one of the entertainers.

MANAGER R. E. MORRIS successfully demonstrated to himself and staff what a difference the box-office receipts show when a picture is ballyhooed—which happened in the case of "The Gaucho" playing at the Strand Theatre, Malden, Mass. A life-size wooden horse equipped with a Mexican saddle and bridle was mounted on a truck and driven to all parts of the city and surrounding towns. A man dressed as "The Gaucho" rode in the saddle.

E. J. NICKERSON put over a series of "Movie Balls" at the Cuban Club in Ybor City that were very successful. At the first ball he gave prizes for the best stunts and imitations of movie stars and took motion pictures of the dancers and contestants for a Beauty Contest. The second week the finished pictures were projected and the people voted for their choice. Nickerson got a great laugh at the finish of the showing of the pictures, when he had the negative film run with all dancers and contestants showing up in "black face."

NATE FRUDENFELD, manager, has prepared a nice little stunt exploiting Herbie Koch, Capitol Theatre organist at Des Moines. He had some films of Herbie which were run some time back. Now he has run off from the film on special paper perforated like a film in which Herbie's smile is shown in four succeeding pictures. These will be given away to all the patrons of the theatre at a near date.

J. H. McLAUGHLIN, of the Franklin Theatre in Tampa, is putting out a "I fit your pocket" program that is nifty. It is printed on light cardboard, four pages about 3 x 4 inches in size. The front page gives a little dope on the prices, dates and theatre name. The two inside pages are devoted to the weeks program and the back page has a weekly writeup on the features of the house.

Radio Presentation Used for Broadcast Stars

Manager Chas. H. Amos had booked a popular radio team in conjunction with the showing of "Rose Marie" at the Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., and that gave him the idea of tieing up with them.

Accordingly, Amos built a radio showing two dials with a loud speaker on top—out of beaverboard. Behind this mammouth radio outfit was a net which practically made the men behind the curtain invisible.

When the curtain opened, a boy in dressing gown was at the radio and as he turned the dials to different points, the act and orchestra back of the scrim would imitate the popular radio stations with music, voice and especially the call announcements.

When quite a bit of this had been done, the announcer back stage announced the Riviera orchestra and act—the lights were brought up bringing the orchestra in view and the scrim was pulled away.

Cafeteria Distributes Ads for "Patent Leather Kid"

In exploiting "The Patent Leather Kid," during its roadshow engagement at the Criterion Theatre, Los Angeles, a cooperative tie-up with Chickle gum and Leighton's cafeteria, proved a valuable publicity getter. Ten thousand envelopes were printed, advertising a brand of gum and the Barthelmess special on one side and Leighton's cafeterias on the other. A stick of gum was put in each envelope. As each customer presented his tray at the desk to receive a check, one of the envelopes was dropped on the tray. This was done at both of the Leighton cafeterias.

The two restaurants also distributed daily 3,500 special menu cards advertising their fifty cent chicken dinners and the showing of "The Patent Leather Kid." The menus were placed every day throughout the run of the picture on every table in the company's two Broadway cafeterias.

Allen Promoted to Post as Manager in Indianapolis

Wally Allen, formerly director of publicity and advertising for the Loew theatres in Pittsburgh has assumed his new duties as manager of Loew's Palace theatre at Indianapolis, the post to which he was recently promoted.

Fans Identify Stars in This Teaser Campaign

A. J. SHARICK, Universal exploiteer, played up to the public's fondness for guessing games in the development of a novel teaser campaign for the showing of "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris" at the Lumberg theatre, Niagara Falls. The title of the picture was withheld for the three days in which the identification contest was carried in a local newspaper. The fans were offered passes to the show as prizes for naming the stars whose pictures were printed in the paper without captions. In addition to naming the stars, the contestants were required to give the titles of the latest pictures in which the players had appeared.

Vitaphone Trailer Record Used as Lobby Ballyhoo for Current Bill

F. M. VAN AUKEN, in charge of exploitation for the Arcade Theatre, West Palm Beach, Florida, has devised a new use for the Vitaphoned trailer that is a standard accessory on Warner Bros. "Tenderloin." After featuring the trailer as advanced exploitation, Van Auken worked out a way to put it into action during the picture's engagement as a sidewalk ballyhoo.

The record from the trailer was run on an Edison phonograph motor and amplified to the marquee using amplifying apparatus and two loud speakers.

This stunt can be used on any of the Vitaphone trailers which Warner Bros. issue on all their sound specials.

Nine Shops Represented in Show of Fashions at Theatre

A RATHER unusual combination of circumstances brought about the consummation of one of the most extensive fashion shows tied up with a motion picture presentation, when B. F. Keith's theatre in Washington, D. C., gave first place to the feature film in exploitation conducted with the cooperation of nine local shops for the showing of "The American Beauty."

Roland Robbins, manager of Keith's, staged the fashion revue in which the local merchants participated with exhibits and special advertising. The event was presented in connection with the Easter week bill at Keith's. The prominence given the picture through this campaign was contrary to the usual custom at this theatre of featuring vaudeville above the film portion of the bill.

Nine of Washington's shops participated in this eye-feast of gorgeous feminine attire. A beavy of professional mannikins exquisitely beautiful themselves and all Washington girls, exhibited an array of the latest advanced modes in superb evening gowns and wraps, tailored wear, imported embroidered frocks, classy sport attire, smart millinery, novelty footwear, etc., and representing the firms of Agasta, Arteraft Shoes, Francise, Inc., Gillespie, Hicks, Pluym's, Rizik Bros., Serposs and Young's, James A. Keane, former director on the Ince lot and well known consultant on fashion decrees for various Hollywood producers, stages the American Beauty Style Show in a masterful manner.

Each participating shop carried announcements in its regular advertising and in addition went in for the full page cooperative trucks tied in with Keith's Theatre and the picture. Special window displays were made at each dealer's establishment and Rizik Bros., using a well known entertainer from the classy Cafe Madrillon as his mannikin, brought in another tieup feature whereby the Style Show was advertised at this popular night club.

Emile, the Mecca of the elite of Washington society, installed a complete Beauty Salon in the Promenade Lounge of Keith's with a corps of beauty experts in attendance, demonstrating the beauty secrets of Billie Dove. Before and after each matinee performance an advertised lecture was given in the theatre on "American Beauty" treatments.

"Find the Line" Game Popular Stunt for Waco Theatre

ALTHOUGH several managers have used the "Find the Line" contest, Manager J. P. Harrison went a step or two farther by calling it the new indoor sport and announcing it for an indefinite run.

For those who aren't entirely familiar with the "Find the Line" contest, five lines taken from five different ads in the Classified-Ad page are shown at one side of the ad and contestants are required to find the ads these lines come from and then send them in to the Contest Editor who judges them as to correctness, neatness and arrangement.

Harrison got on the average of 20 inches free space daily and the letters sent in by the contestants were so numerous that the local Postmaster called up the Contest Editor to inquire how much longer the Contest was going to last.

The stunt not only works to the advantage of selling a picture but derives a certain amount of prestige for the theatre as well. Ten prizes in the form of passes are awarded daily to the winners and no one person can win more than twice in any one week.

Lively Interest in Revival Programs at Liberty

Following a custom adopted by exhibitors in some other cities, Samuel Carver, manager of the Liberty theatre, first run downtown house in Kansas City, found a lively response to a voting contest on the revival of pictures shown in the last two or three years. Each performance a "reader" is thrown on the screen, explaining to the audience that the management will show one or two pictures receiving the largest number of votes, providing the pictures have been shown in the last two or three years.

Key City Reports

New York City

JUST a so-so showing for the majority of the Broadway theatres last week with nothing much out-of-the-ordinary happening along in the way of outstanding attendance marks. On the contrary, three of the regulars dropped out after making as brave a stand as possible.

Much wagging of tongues preceded the premiere of Paramount's "Abie" at the 44th Street theatre and many of the boys among the local trade were "needled" to a point where something in the way of a sensation was expected from the screen version of the widely known Anne Nichols' comedy. Overstimulation and a natural reaction from a great ballyhoo may somewhat account for a lack of enthusiasm from certain members of the trade and diversity of opinion from local newspaper reviewers as to the merits of this highly-touted film. It will be recalled that the premiere of the Nichols' stage play received the same treatment from the press—and others at the outset—but what happened is pleasant history for Miss Nichols. Anyway, conjecture over "Abie" is rampant. The box office will tell the story.

Among the popular priced houses the Roxy and the Paramount led the procession but the big Fox first run house showed a falling off from the previous week. The feature picture was "Love Hungry" (Fox) surrounded by the usual lavish Rothafel bill. The Paramount had Paul Whiteman and the Menjou feature "A Night of Mystery" (Par.) and honors were about even for a good week's attendance.

The Capitol did not do so well with a second week of the Gilbert-Garbo team in "Love" but this was to be expected after its long run here and this fact coupled with the decline only gave the house a fair return.

The Strand with "The Mad Hour" (F. N.) turned in an average week's trade for the house and the Rialto finished up with a pretty fair run of "The Legion of the Condemned." This airplane picture has received a good rating but was a bit hard put to compete with "Wings," another aviation film. With the competition of the latter out of the way the former might have stayed quite a long time.

Harold Lloyd in his new picture, "Speedy," did a consistent second week at the Rivoli and went into the third with strong indications that this film is in for a good run. The Colony closed its doors with the termination of the four week's run of "We Americans"—and to a showing hardly in keeping with the reported drawing power of the picture. A tough spot on the street is the real dope on this.

The Criterion is still prospering with "Wings" (Par.) True, the picture feels the ups and downs of the street, but continues to display strength in its ninth month. The popularity of the Farrell-Gaynor combination is getting in its wallop at the Gobe with the result that "Street Angel" took a decided spurt for the week. It is probably the strongest of the Fox two-a-day line up along the Street. "Four Sons" at the Gaiety (Fox) can be rated as next in line with trade for the week fair. "Mother Machree" (Fox) lingers at the Times Square.

The Embassy with "Two Lovers" (U. A.) turned in another week of average business and still does not show signs of giving up to another picture. Universal closed the run of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" at the Central and will probably follow in with "The Man Who Laughs" (U). As mentioned last week, "Tenderloin (W. B.) will be succeeded at Warner's with "Glorious Betsy" and Vitaphone. Zakora's "The Last Moment" did well enough for a week at the Cameo.

The Astor with M-G-M's "The Trail of '98" continues to draw steady trade.

Dallas

DALLAS theatregoers discovered that some good pictures were being shown last week, and as the weather was ideal they partook of the offerings, and the result was that Dallas theatre business was very good.

The Melba is proceeding to do what could not be done, and Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer" is going into the third week, with two weeks of good business already chalked up. Three-week runs are rare in Dallas, but from present appearances it can be done.

At the Majestic, "Publicity Madness," with Lois Moran and Edmund Lowe, failed to draw, but an unusually good vaudeville bill, headed by "The Rookies," brought them in and business for the week was good.

"The Showdown," with George Bancroft and Evelyn Brent, at the Palace, brought business down, and comment was not favorable. Although a profit was shown for the week it was a bad bet for the Palace.

The Capitol, showing "Seventh Heaven" in a return engagement, packed them every night, and gross for the week was the largest recorded this year. This picture would have held up for a longer run.

"Stand and Deliver," with Rod La Rocque and Lupe Valez, and "Wife Savers," with Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton, proved good drawing cards at the Old Mill, and business was very good.

"The Love Mart," with Billie Dove and Gilbert Roland, and "Wild Geese," with Belle Bennett and Eve Southern, added another good week to the Arcadia's books.

St. Louis

WITH employment on the increase, the Lenten season passed into history, and fairish sort of entertainment on tap at the various amusement palaces, St. Louisians went to their favorite first-run picture houses in greater aggregate than during the average week of the past Winter in the seven-day period that ended on April 20.

At Loew's State, Corinne Griffith held forth in "The Garden of Eden," and supported by a stage show entitled "Pinwheels," pulled in her share of the patronage passed out during the week. Corinne has quite a personal following in St. Louis and vicinity.

At the Missouri, Richard Dix was on the screen. The title of the picture feature was "Easy Come, Easy Go," while on the stage Arthur Nealy was in charge as master of ceremonies. On the whole it was a good average week for this house.

Across the street, Vitaphone continued to do very good business with "Tenderloin," which was held over for an extra week.

The St. Louis Theatre showed on its screen Madge Bellamy in "Play Girl." Sessue Hayakawa, the well-known motion picture star, was the vaudeville headliner of the week. Receipts were up to standard set by this popular house.

Downtown at Skouras Brothers' Ambassador, Esther Ralston, in "Love and Learn," and Ed Lowry on the stage "In Hollywood," had a very big week.

Minneapolis

THERE were some fairly good movie attractions in Minneapolis last week and business responded to them in nice style.

Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" was the standout attraction of the week, and this film comedy proved extremely popular at the State. If it had been shown in some smaller house it undoubtedly would have been held over for a second week. Lon Chaney in "The Big City" held forth at the new Minnesota, which supplemented its program with the Publix stage unit show, "Dancing Feet." The Minnesota enjoyed an excellent business, although attendance is naturally not up to the standard of the first two or three weeks, when the town was fighting for the opportunity to see its largest and handsomest picture theatre.

At the Strand "The Crowd" did a satisfactory business, although not as big as this very excellent picture deserved to do. Tom Mix, in "Horseman of the Plains," was the Pantages attraction, and Mix drew in the crowds, as he always does. Pola Negri did about the average business at the Lyric, while "One Round Hogan" proved popular at the Hennepin-Orpheum, where Ted Lewis and his orchestra were the big attractions. The Seventh Street showed Sally Blaine in "Her Summer Hero."

The neighborhood houses were showing some rather nice attractions and found that they were still pulling. These included "The Gaucho," at the Lagoon and Loring; "Seventh Heaven," at the Rialto, and "The Last Command," at the American.

The movies had two strong legitimate attractions to contend with. One was "Broadway," at the Metropolitan, and the other was "Chicago" at the Shubert, where Lillian Foster opened a three weeks' guest star engagement with the Bainbridge Players.

Buffalo

BUSINESS at Buffalo playhouses last week was fair, but nothing to write home about, due largely to inclement weather. Shea's Buffalo got normal patronage for "The Garden of Eden" on the screen, and "Hula Blues," an elaborate Publix revue, on the stage. The receipts, however, did not measure up to the previous week's, when Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" broke all records. "Tartuffe, the Hypocrite," a UFA production, did not quite measure up to expectations at the Hippodrome, although Emil Jannings, star of the picture, drew his followers in good numbers. Prince Lei Lani and his Royal Samoans, singers, dancers and musicians, topped the vaudeville bill. The week started off excellently but fell off gradually later.

At the Great Lakes, "The Leopard Lady" on the screen and the Varsity Freshies, a collegian orchestra, which evoked favorable comment, drew the customers in good fashion. Loew's State had a very good week, largely due to the personal appearance of Jim Corbett, famous prize-fight champion, in a comedy skit, as head of the stage bill. The picture was "Bringing Up Father." The crowds that flocked to Loew's, however, went to see Corbett.

The Lafayette had a fair box-office turnover, with "The Port of Missing Girls" as the cinema attraction, and "Jerry and Her Baby Grandes," featuring a quartet of female pianists, heading the vaudeville offering.

Cleveland

THE past week was generally satisfactory from a box-office angle. No records were broken. But, on the other hand, all of the theatres report that business was average, so there are no deficits to report.

"Wings," playing its second week of a roadshow engagement at the Colonial Theatre, continues to attract large crowds, especially for the evening performances. The matinees are rather light. "The Patent Leather Kid" did well enough at the Stillman to justify holding it over for another week. "Old Ironsides," playing its first local popular prices' engagement at the Allen, did very well, boosted by exploitation and contests.

The State Theatre had big crowds all week. The feature attraction was "A Night of Mystery," something a little different from the usual Menjou picture. Keith's Palace kept the house full for all performances of "The Mad Hour," a typical Elinor Glyn picture, with a great punch at the finish.

Harry Langdon's comedy, "The Chaser," pleased the Langdon fans, with its slapstick comedy and its gags. Reade's Hippodrome had just a fair week. "Stop That Man" was the feature attraction, a diverting comedy-melodrama, which deserved greater appreciation by the public. The Park played a first-run neighborhood engagement of "The Last Command" with most satisfactory results.

The Cameo continued with the second-run downtown showing of "Speedy" with such success that the run is being continued. And "The Jazz Singer," like the brook, runs on indefinitely at the Circle with Vitaphone. This picture played the Stillman for five weeks, and is now about to enter its third week at the Circle

Neighborhood theatre business is not satisfactory.

Albany and Troy

THERE was little cause for complaint among the exhibitors of Albany last week, in so far as business was concerned. The weather remained cool throughout the week, and there were no counter attractions to seriously cut into receipts at the box office. As a result, the majority of the theatres reported business as being up to normal, and in some cases almost reaching the previous week, when the crowds came back strong after the Lenten season. One of the biggest business getters of the week in Albany proved to be Harold Lloyd in "Speedy.". This picture had been liberally advertised, and the fact that it was going over well in New York City, 150 miles away, seemed to be pretty well known in Albany, and to have its effect. There were standing lines each night, while the matinees appeared to be above the average.

At the Leland, "A Girl in Every Port" packed them in each night, although the picture was little above average from the standpoint of entertainment. But it seemed to please and the crowds came. At the Mark Ritz, "Tillie's Punctured Romance" went over exceptionally well throughout the week, starting off with a bang and gaining day by day. The Clinton Square Theatre, which is playing first-run double features, did well with "Pajamas,, and "The Streets of Shanghai." Proctor's Grand scored in having the first pictures of Major Fitzmaurice, the transatlantic flier. The theatre lost no time in advertising the fact, and inasmuch as his relatives reside in the neighboring city of Troy, there was a big crowd on hand to see the newsreel of the flier. Business continued good at Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, with a combination of vaudeville and pictures. Neighborhood houses, such as the Eagle, Colonial, Arbor and other theatres in Albany, which depend upon residential rather than downtown business, reported business as good.

In Troy, Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson" did not come up to expectations from the standpoint of the box-office. In fact, business was reported as poor. The picture started off well, but for some reason did not hold up, many complaining that they did not care for the picture, which probably knocked off business. At the Lincoln in Troy, "Wife Savers" also played to poor business, probably due to the fact that Beery and Hatton are not very popular in the Collar City. The American used "Devil's Trade Mark" with fair business.

The neighborhood houses in Troy assert that business is off at the present time. The situation in Troy may be due more to a general business depression rather than to lack of entertainment on the part of pictures shown. And yet, on the other hand, the Proctor Theatre, with its vaudeville and pictures, is playing to capacity business.

Milwaukee

AFTER the unusually good business enjoyed by Milwaukee theatres last week, things looked rather dull, but were in reality just about average. Weather was clear and cold and did nothing to interfere with patronage at the down-town theatres.

Milwaukeeans were invited to take a chance at the Wisconsin. Results showed Miwaukeeans rather skeptical; the receipts were short of average. "Mad Hour" was the photoplay feature. Folks here apparently prefer to shop for their amusement. The Orpheum drew capacity houses during the entire week and "Freckles" here pleased patrons greatly. "Rose Marie," at the Merrill, brought in very satisfactory returns.

"Legion of the Condemned" was given a second week's run at the Strand. Business was fairly active here.

"The Irresistible Lover" was well attended at the Alhambra. Two popular radio artists from Chicago, Al Carney and Pat Barnes, appeared on the Alhambra program on Monday night and helped to a great extent to swell receipts for that night.

Neighborhood theatres enjoyed average business throughout the week. "The Smart Set" was offered patrons of the Oriental and was well received. "Husbands for Rent," at the Egyptian, was a good business getter. "That's My Daddy" played to good houses at the Colonial. "Old Ironsides" was shown at the Uptown, Tower and Garfield and met with moderate success.

Cincinnati

BUSINESS last week was spotty, in so far as the individual houses were concerned, although in the final check-up the aggregate averaged up quite satisfactorily.

Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" at the Lyric did well during the second week of the engagement, which will be extended for at least another seven days.

"The Mad Hour" at the Albee draw exceptionally well, although the stage attractions was no doubt responsible for considerable of the patronage.

Norma Talmadge in "The Dove" at the Capitol had a splendid week, and the picture will be held over. This house has now installed Movietone, which is being featured in addition to the Vitaphone.

Keith's, with Mary Pickford in "My Best Girl," started off with a steady following, which, however, increased materially as the week wore on. The picture is held over for an additional week.

"Baby Mine" at the Walnut did an average business. Ditto for the Strand, with Olive Borden in "Come To My House."

"Cheating Cheaters," first half, and "Keeper of the Bees," with Clara Bow last half, did an average business at the Family.

The special engagement of "Simba" at the Grand Opera House undoubtedly diverted considerable business from the regular houses.

San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO enjoyed a week of ideal motion picture weather, it being neither too warm nor too cold. Usually, when it gets too warm in this city at this time of the year, the people go to the beach and when too cold or too rainy, as part of the last weeks have had, the people stay at home or only visit the residential houses. Thirty thousand sailors visiting in 45 warships also helped crowd the theatres.

The Embassy reported another good week with the showing of "The Jazz Singer," on for a tenth week, and, while not as big crowds as the first six or seven weeks, the houses did well.

"Across to Singapore," as shown at Loew's Warfield theatre, with Rube Wolf on the stage with the presentation act "Pan-Americana," crowded that theatre all week.

The Granada did well the first of the week with "A Night of Mystery" and the presentation act "Hands-Up." The latter part of the week the theatre did fairly well. "Speedy" attracted many to the California theatre, many visiting sailors enjoying that picture. "The Patent Leather Kid," as shown at the St. Francis theatre, did big business.

The Golden Gate theatre did much better than expected with the picture, "The Blue Danube," which was shown there together with vaudeville acts, and the Union Square theatre reported very good business with "Oh, What a Night," which was shown with five acts of vaudeville.

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatres enjoyed substantial business last week, despite the opening of a first class stock company at the Erlanger, which naturally showed its effects.

The box-office winner was Paramount's muchly advertised aerial picture, "The Legion of the Condemned," playing at the Howard.

Lon Chaney, in "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," brought good criticisms and drew fair houses, but in the estimation of many his work and the story was too far above the appreciation of Loew's Grand audiences to do the business to which it was entitled.

Keith's Georgia played to very good houses with Rod LaRocque in "Stand and Deliver." It came second in the gross receipts at the box-office.

"The Little Snob" did better business for the Capitol than was anticipated at the beginning of the week. Great was the fall of the Metropolitan with "Ham and Eggs at the Front." The Rialto showed "A Woman's Way" and "The Sporting Age" to fair houses. Three numbers, "The Lost Battalion," "Gold from Weepah" and "Wild Beauty" held a steady gait for the Tudor.

Kansas City

ATTENDANCE continued to remain at the "just fair" mark at practically all down-town Kansas City theatres last week.

"The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," with Richard Barthelmess, at the Mainstreet set the pace in attendance, although even that theatre did not draw what it should have. At Loew's Midland, Lon Chaney in "The Big City" played to fair crowds all week, which also can be said of "A Woman's Way," at the Liberty.

"Across the Atlantic," at the Globe, did not draw what was expected of it, but "Love Hungry," at the Pantages, did better than was predicted for it, playing to good attendance all week. Adolphe Menjou, in "A Night of Mystery," at the Newman, played to business below normal.

Aside from the Mainstreet, no special exploitation effort was made by any of the theatres. The Mainstreet, however, doubled its newspaper space.

Baltimore

THREE of the first-run theatres in Baltimore did excellent business throughout the week beginning Monday, April 16.

They were the Metropolitan, where "Tenderloin," starring Dolores Costello, was presented, with Vitaphone accompaniment and dialogue and other Vitaphone acts on the bill; at the Little Theatre, where "Cyrano de Bergerac, starring Pierre Magnier, shown entirely in colors after the scenes were rearranged and the production was tightened up by Machat Brothers of the Motion Picture Guild, Inc. Business was so good that the film was held for a second week. At the Stanley, "The Noose," starring Richard Barthelmess, went over very big, with a presentation act headed by Sammy Kaufman with an orchestra and other featured vaudevillians.

Loew's Century did very good business also with "Something Always Happens," starring Esther Ralston and a stage presentation act entitled Rio Romance, with Ted Claire and other vaudeville players.

"Skyscraper," starring William Boyd, went over very good at the New Theatre with a stage act. This picture was generally liked by the public and built up as the week went on.

"A Perfect Gentleman," with Monty Banks in the featured role, proved a good drawing card at the Palace Theatre, where burlesque is presented with pictures.

Business was fairly good throughout the week at Keith's Hippodrome, with "The Main Event" and five acts of Keith-Albee family time vaudeville on the same bill.

At the Rivoli, "Doomsday," starring Florence Vidor, proved only a so-so drawing card, with a presentation act offered also with Howard Emerson and his orchestra.

Business during the second week of "The Gaucho" at Loew's Valencia, with Douglas Fairbanks, proved only fair.

"The Gay Retreat was the picture attraction at the New Garden, with eight acts of Keith-Albee high-class vaudeville, and business there was fair during the week, and went up on Friday and Saturday to good.

Seattle

FOR the second successive week, the Fifth Avenue theatre last week walked away with a big majority of the city's show business, in a week that was just about normal for this time of year.

Again the Fifth Avenue owed its great box office record to the super-showmanship of Eddie Peabody, who continues to click as the greatest box office attraction to ever hit any Seattle theatre. Eddie, with Jimmy Maisel and Gogo DeLys, staged a very entertaining presentation. Borrah Minnevitch and His Harmonica Rascals took care of the traveling part of the stage show with much success, and Oliver Wallace's "Holy City" organ presentation was a triumphant rendition. "Richard Dix, in "Sporting Goods" was the film attraction, sort of an "added attraction" at that, but it was satisfactory for this particular bill. Business practically capacity, with gross around $18,000.

The Seattle theatre came in second place with "Partners in Crime," and Treasure Ships" on the stage. The film was not very popular, but the Publix revue, headed by Val and Ernie Stanton, local favorites, aided in putting the bill over. Local audiences are getting rather disgusted with the recent Beery-Hatton films, and don't patronize them much any more. Just an average week for this big house.

At the United Artists theatre, "Speedy" made its appearance just a day ahead of the national release date and New York premiere. The picture was highly praised by critics and well liked by audiences. Business was very big for the first week—one of the best grosses in recent months for Manager Perutz's house, with good exploitation and publicity.

"Brass Knuckles," at the Blue Mouse theatre, was an average attraction that failed to arouse much enthusiasm. Business was fairly good—noticeably less than the usual close-to-capacity business that was formerly the vogue at this house. It is quite evident that strong films are essential, despite Vitaphone and Movietone installations; program attractions don't click.

At the Columbia theatre, "Tell It to Sweeney" failed to get much business. "The Fourflusher," at the Orpheum, and "Love Hungry," at the Pantages, were satisfactory vaudeville house pictures. Business was average.

"Stage Kisses," at the Embassy, rounded out the downtown key first runs in a satisfactory manner.

Harrisburg, Pa.

THE pictures that achieved the best box office results in the first run theatres during the week were "Speedy," which was repeated from the previous week at the Colonial, and "The Legion of the Condemned," wartime aviation thriller, which packed the Victoria at all performances, both afternoon and evening. Though no extraordinary exploitation was attempted for "The Legion of the Condemned," it seized the popular fancy from the start, solely through its merit as a gripping entertainment, and held it throughout the six days.

It is very seldom that any Harrisburg theatre will take a chance by holding over a film play the second week. Several times when this has been done the picture, after a successful first week, has petered out as a money-earner in the second six days. This did not prove true with "Speedy," however. After a week of phenomenal success at the Colonial, the clever Lloyd comedy scored almost as heavily during the additional engagement. Many persons saw the picture two or three times.

The main attraction at Loew's Regent was Gilda Gray and Clive Brook in "The Devil Dancer." The play, however, seemed to lack the punch to attract more than average crowds, though Miss Gray's dancing was admittedly very alluring. At the State the film attraction the last half of the week was "Square Crooks." The presence of Gertrude Ederle, the English Channel conqueror, with the Baker sisters—an act that was much advertised in advance—helped to stimulate interest in program as a whole, and the business done was exceptionally large. The principal offering at the Broad was "Rose Marie," which did a nice business. The Grand got good results with Colleen Moore in "Her Wlid Oat."

Indianapolis

CIRCLE and Indiana. Skouras-Publix units, and the Loew's Palace are waging a bitter fight for downtown movie business since adoption of the stage production policy.

The Circle had a good opening week last week with introduction of Eddie Pardo's stage band and a local dancing chorus of sixteen girls under Miss Marjorie Alton, former Follies dancer. The Circle drew some of Indiana's business the opening week.

Loew's Palace presented "Sorrell and Son" with Mort Harris production, "The Baby Grands." Indiana's show was Harold Lloyd in "Speedy," with Charlie Davis' stage band.

Apollo reopened this week under new management with "Tenderloin," installing Vitaphone and Movietone. Competition in the downtown houses has resolved itself to the pictures.

Neighborhood houses are gaining slightly in spring business.

Opening of Riverside and municipal parks and golf courses Sunday will cut movie receipts.

Salt Lake City

THE box office reports at the down town picture houses this past week averaged fairly good as a whole here. The Capitol theatre presented Richard Barthelmess in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," which was quite a drawing card, as was the indoor circus act presented by Fanchon and Marco, which was headed by Lillian St. Leon and company, and also featuring Gobel's African Lions and their trainer Herman Zeigler, and Eddie Kane acting as master of ceremonies.

"The Latest from Paris" played to satisfactory crowds at the Pantages theatre. John Bowers and Marquerite De La Motte appeared in person at the Pantages here this week, also attracting a good deal of attention.

Dolores Del Rio, in "Ramona,' has perhaps headed the list at the Paramount Empress here during the week, having been received by packed houses, and in a very favorable manner, it is reported.

The American theatre did fairly satisfactory business during the week's presentation of Rin Tin Tin in "Jaws of Steel."

"The Blue Danube" is reported to have gone over exceptionally well at the Gem theatre.

Due to public demand here the Victory theatre has presented the second showing of "The Big Parade," with especial musical accompaniment, and has done a satisfactory business.

Des Moines

THE Vitaphone pictures had their opening at the Des Moines this week with "The Jazz Singer" and were most enthusiastically received. All house records were broken by this picture, which will hold over for two weeks, a long run here. Theatre patrons expressed themselves as having enjoyed the picture more than anything they had seen for a long time. Manager Levine is well pleased with the unusually fine installation which was given to the Des Moines theatre equipment. At Davenport, Iowa, this feature also opened at the Columbia and did very, very fine business.

At the Capitol theatre in Des Moines the week's returns did not seem to suffer a bit by the attraction of the Vitaphone next door. William Haines in "The Smart Set" met with success and the stage show "Arabian Nights was colorful and full of mirth. At the Strand theatre, "Freckles" was the feature and it did a good run. Snow in northern Iowa has closed many roads, but the exhibitors can be optimistic about the fact that it helped the spring wheat.

"Chicago," at the Orpheum, billed over the vaudeville, did a big week.

Pittsburgh

NIXON theatre, going into its third week with "Wings," continued to do a good business.

Penn theatre had Lon Chaney in "The Big City" on the screen, and on the stage "Hey, Hey," with Frank Devoe and Jack Powell, Gibson Sisters and John Boyle's Hey, Hey Girls. One of the cleverest and most beautiful shows to play the Penn as yet. Business very good. Penn Stage Band, Don Albert directing, completes the show.

"Dressed to Kill" was the feature picture at the Stanley theatre. This is a nice picture and would have done well if it had not been for the Penn theatre playing Chaney in the same type of picture. The stage show is called "In Granada," an Edward Hyman production featuring Chaz Chase, comedian. This unit very weak. Phil Spitalny and his band are featured with the show. Business very poor.

Grand theatre, with Harold Lloyd in "Speedy," did a fair business, as this was their third week.

Ottawa

OPINIONS regarding film features presented in Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of April 16 were very much divided, and as there was practically no opposition there was considerable talk about the pictures.

Take, for instance, "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" at the Centre Theatre. This sounded like the makings of a million dollar production, but, after seeing it, we are forced to the conclusion that the Ontario censor clipped off $400,000 worth. Many enjoyed the smart titles; the burlesque business was well done and numerous shots were impressive, but the censor had done his worst.

"My Friend From India" provided marked variety for the general run of features at B. F. Keith's, big crowds finding it a very different kind of farce.

Varied comment was heard regarding "The Divine Woman" at the Regent. Some thought Greta Garbo had done her best acting in this while others were thrilled by the story. There are those who cannot see Greta at all. The Regent had a fairly good week.

The Imperial pulled right up and called itself a prosperous theatre with "The Patsy," starring Marion Davies. It was one of the biggest weeks of the season at the Imperial. The only Marion Davies picture here that has not secured big business was "Quality Street."

They fought to get into the Rex Theatre to see the neighborhood run of "Beau Geste" after it had played several big engagements in Ottawa.

As usual with Tom Mix at the Fern Theatre, the place was jammed to the ceiling for "Silver Valley," the program also including "Melting Millions."

The Columbia fared well with "Lightning Lariats," this proving to be a popular neighborhood release. The Princess also got its share with "One Round Hogan," while the Francais drew fair crowds with a double bill, "Tracked by the Police" and "The Tigress," Rin-Tin-Tin arousing the talk as usual.

Boston

TYPICAL spring weather, with occasional showers, has been a good omen for Boston theatres, for the week's receipts are among the best in months. All of the out-of-door attractions have only helped to bring the crowds into the downtown houses. Opening of the baseball season was looked upon with some doubt by theatre managers, but it is a fact that with the opening of the season there has been a substantial general increase in all theatres.

"King of Kings" has taken up its home at the Colonial theatre, Boston's leading legitimate theatre, as a road show, and is the city's only road show. There has been a considerable interim since "Wings" departed as the preceding road show for Boston. The latter played to capacity audiences for weeks at Tremont theatre, but the Tremont has smaller capacity than the Colonial. Early reports from "King of Kings" are to the effect that the record made by "Wings" may soon be surpassed.

Metropolitan's showing of "The Legion of the Condemned" proved a real attraction and receipts were well above par. Gene Rodemich and stage band, with features, was the presentation.

"The Smart Set," at Loew's State, played to heavy business throughout the week. Mlle. Ledova and her company of dancers provided the presentation number.

Modern and Beacon theatres, the twin houses, have been happy in their selection of films, for "The Port of Missing Girls" had to be held over a second week at both houses, playing to capacity business both weeks.

Keith-Albee Boston theatre experienced one of the best weeks in its history with "The Pioneer Scout" and a vaudeville bill better than average.

Offerings at the other theatres were of better than average selection, with the result that business throughout the city and suburbs was well above the usual spring patronage.

Among the leading theatres, films which proved attractive were "Red Hair" at the Scollay Square Olympia, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" at the Washington Street Olympia, "Sadie Thompson" at the Bowdoin Square, "The Devil Dancer" at Loew's Orpheum, "The Forbidden Woman" at the Howard, "The Showdown" at the Fenway, "West Point" at the Field's Corner, "Burning Daylight" at the Allston, "Red Hair" at the Capitol, "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris" at the Strand, and "Doomsday" at the Codman Square.

Tampa

LAST week Tampa celebrated the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Panfilo de Narvaez on the shores of Tampa bay. The pageant opened Sunday afternoon and cut the matinee attendance in practically every theatre quite materially. Then about 5.30 it started to rain, keeping up until midnight, which put such a crimp into the crowds that Sunday goes down as poor.

The Victory led the field last week. This house was the only one to make much of a showing against the pageant Sunday afternoon. The big card was the opening of the Movietone News and the special reels of the President and Lindbergh after the "Lone Eagle" returned from Paris. The feature picture was "The Missing Link." There were also four of the Vitaphone presentations. A corker of a show and big business all week.

The Tampa started out with a poor Sunday, but the following three days went over better. "Drums of Love" was featured, but it did not seem to catch on with Tampa fans. "The Noose," used the last half, did better.

The Strand also had a poor Sunday, but Monday came up nicely. "The Mad Hour" was the feature used these two days. "Tillie's Punctured Romance" did nicely for three days and "Soft Living" kept them coming the last two.

Taking the week as a whole, the Franklin went over better than average. "Chinatown Charlie" and "Square Crooks" were the first runs used and "Red Hair" brought back for a second showing. All pictures did nicely.

Farash to Erect $150,000 Scotia Theatre

PROPERTY on Mohawk Avenue, Scotia, New York, has been acquired by the Farash Theatres Company, Inc., of Schenectady, on which work will start at once on a new $150,000 motion picture theatre. The structure will be three stories high and two stores and six offices will be located in front. This house, announces William M. Shirley, president and general manager of the Farash company, will be the beginning of a new chain of theatres his company plans to acquire or build within a radius of 100 miles of Schenectady, the headquarters of the chain.

The Scotia house will have a seating capacity of 1,400 and is expected to be ready for opening by Labor Day. It will be similar in construction to the Strand in Schenectady, although the architecture will be slightly different.

Ottawa
(Previous Week)

WHAT a week there was for Ottawa, Ontario, theatres following Easter! Every theatre was jammed afternoon and evening, thanks to the Easter vacation, excellent pictures and the release from Lenten obligations.

Probably the finest of them all was "Speedy" at the Regent Theatre. Even the newspapermen had to take back seats in the gallery to see it, and they were glad to get in at all. The general verdict was that it was Harold Lloyd's best.

Then it was another fight to get into B. F. Keith's Theatre, the largest amusement house in town, to see Richard Dix in "Sporting Goods." This also was a comedy that pleased everybody from golfer to mechanic. N. V. A. Jubilee Week was being observed, and the bill was good all round.

The women flocked to "The Love Mart" at the Centre Theatre to be thrilled, and the men to get an eye-full and nobody was disappointed with Billie Dove. And Manager Don Stapleton wasn't disappointed with the box office returns either.

The Imperial Theatre had an old-time line-up in front of the wicket all week for Reginald Denny's "That's My Daddy." The title didn't mean anything but there are plenty of Denny fans in Ottawa and they liked him in this story.

Manager Fred Benson had to run a matinee daily at the Fern Theatre, neighborhood house, and it was one of the best box-office weeks there. "Foreign Devils" and "Melting Millions" were the talk of the neighbors.

"The Great Mail Robbery" lived up to expectations in the way of thrills at the Rex, and Manager Ambrose Nolan was only sorry that the Rex did not have rubber walls. Typical holiday crowds also saw "Is Zat So?" at the Columbia Theatre,

Opinions on Pictures

The Play Girl

Interesting and Fairly Amusing

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

EVER since Madge Bellamy flashed across the screen as a young woman who could disrobe (partly, you know) and be discreet about it at the same time she has been given one picture after another to carry out this design. So "The Play Girl" enters the procession and Madge does her bit in making it enjoyable. It is a pretty thin plot. In fact, it has no plot at all. But it has a deal of sparkle and the scenes are really stimulating (at least to the eye if not the mind).

Here the star plays a clerk in a florist shop. When she is sent to a bachelor apartment to deliver a certain bouquet and see to it that the flowers are placed in water, she gets the surprise of her life. At this particular hotel and in this particular room the girl notices that an attractive youth is occupying the bath. From this point it is easy to guess the romance. To make the plot "intrikut" the girl loses her job and she is advised to take up a gold-digging career. After encountering a misunderstanding here and there with the boy friend the love interest comes right out into the open and ends the picture. It is a good little number and calculated to amuse anyone for its hour on the screen.

Drawing Power: Suitable for average houses. Good for first runs if supported by well-balanced bill. Exploitation Angles: Play up the appeal of star. Bill as clever comedy of girl who knows how to get along in the world.

THEME: Comedy-romance of florist shop-girl who meets youth in embarrassing moment and develops romance.

Produced and distributed by Fox Films. Length, six reels. Released, April, 1928. The Cast: Madge Bellamy, John Mack Brown, Walter McGrail, Lionel Belmore, Thelma Hill, Anita Garvin, Harry Timbrooke. Director, Arthur Rosson.

Burning Daylight

Very Ordinary Story, But Has Action

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

JACK LONDON'S story of gold-rush days in Alaska carries a corking title, but it tells nothing that hasn't been told many, many times in celluloid. It hasn't much feminine interest, the appeal catering almost entirely to masculine minds. Between the covers of a book London made it vivid and dramatic. But a lot of the yellow metal has been dug out of the celluloid Klondyke since the author's day. Which, of course makes the film very familiar.

The picture is all Milton Sills and again he has one of those strong, silent, he-man roles. It is his job to rescue and protect the innocent dance-hall girl and after some orthodox scenes showing him prospecting for gold, driving a dog team and crashing San Francisco society he comes back to the Yukon and finds peace. There is a deal of villainy to overcome here. Leave that to Sills to accomplish. But he has engaged in bigger and better fights. And the action shots here don't ring so genuine. The picture is atmospherically on the up and up and it is cast in keeping with its backgrounds. Doris Kenyon makes an appealing heroine and Stuart Holmes, Edmund Breese and Howard Truesdale are competent crooks.

Drawing Power: Suitable for average houses. Title is good and Sills has his favorites. Exploitation Angles: Feature the title and the background of Alaska. Exploit Sills as an action star.

THEME: Melodrama of Alaska with hero rescuing dance-hall girl and falling in love with her.

Produced and distributed by First National. Length, 6,500 feet. Released, March, 1928. The Cast: Milton Sills, Doris Kenyon, Arthur Stone, Guinn Williams, Jack McDonald, Jane Winton, Edmund Breese, Howard Truesdale, Stuart Holmes, Harry Northrup, Lawford Davidson. Director, Charles Brabin.

The Lone Eagle

Routine Fireworks in the Air

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THOUGH it bears a title which calls to mind that daring young man, this film doesn't do a Lindbergh. It has not been produced with any class, nor does it carry sizzling airplane shots which would have given it a kick. But it is an aviation film, and therefore the recipient of tremendous and free publicity from the daily press and other agencies chronicling the exploits of various aviation heroes who are following one another with some rapidity throughout the pages of the daily prints these days.

Bearing a good title and presenting a setting which is alive to say the least, the film has some pull for the wayward customer who wanders by the marquee, cons the posters which tell him what the feature is about, and contemplates whether he will enter or not. There are not any "names" of above-the-average strength to make attractive the cast, but this shortcoming is offset by the theme of the picture.

Drawing Power: Fairly good program fare. Good for neighborhood and second-run houses. Exploitation Angles: Use propellers, small airplanes and aviator's togs to make an attractive lobby display. The title of the film calls forth visions of Lindbergh.

THEME: Young aviator joins corps of daredevil fliers and loses his nerve in an encounter with the enemy. A French girl awakens his sleeping valor with the result that he avenges the death of his fellow fliers.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Released, September, 1928. Length, 5,862 feet. The Cast: Raymond Keane, Barbara Kent, Nigel Barrie, Donald Stuart, Jack Pennick, Guyler Supple, Trixie, Frank Campbell, Marcelle Daly, Eugene Pouyet, Wilson Benge, Brent Overstreet, Lieut. Egbert Cook. Story by Lieut. Ralph Blanchard. Director, Emory Johnson.

Three Sinners

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE newest picture to come Pola Negri's way doesn't shape up as anything that can be called startling. It's quite preposterous. Perhaps it had to be to get around the censors. So it emerges as a work that is quite old-fashioned in theme and treatment. The star plays a German countess who develops a liaison with a friend of the family. And the story gets out of place in trying to paint the lily white. When she is reported dead after the train she is supposed to take is wrecked, the countess bobs up in Paris in a white wig.

From that situation it concerns her philandering husband to fall in love with her again without discovering her identity. The moment arrives for the entry of an American who rescues her from a situation that threatens to become embarrassing. In trying to make over the character of the central figure they took away any opportunity for Miss Negri to suggest any vital characterization. She becomes a clothes-horse here and strikes some effective poses. But the role is too weak for the actress who made such a grand impression in "Passion." Warner Baxter, Tullio Carminati and Paul Lukas have the other important parts. And do tolerably well by them.

Drawing Power: Title is alluring. So is Negri. Should do business in average houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up Negri and feature her in her white wig. Bill as a drama of the Continent, etc.

THEME: Drama of domesticity with triangle intervening to make a problem of it.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, six reels. Released, April, 1928. The Cast: Pola Negri, Warner Baxter, Tullio Carminati, Paul Lukas, Olga Baklanova, Ivy Harris, Anders Randolph, Anton Vaverka. Directed by Rowland V. Lee.

Shooting Stars

Novel Play Makes it Interesting

(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

A NUMBER of rather novel dramatic situations, particularly those which develop as the climax of this triangle play dealing with motion picture actors, give this English picture, produced by British Instructional Films, Ltd., considerable audience appeal. The story has many fine situations for photoplay treatment and several of these have received remarkably effective treatment in the work of the director and the camera man. On the other hand the connecting thread leading from one dramatic highlight to another seems especially wavy and weak. Meaningless motion and a cluttering of insignificant detail handicap the work.

The American edition of the film has been edited and titled by Merritt Crawford.

"Shooting Stars" they are—these studio people. The heroine, a star, is married to her leading man and in love with a comedian. When it appears that her husband will divorce her—thus creating a scandal that will terminate a contract she has signed to go to America—she substitutes a ball cartridge for the blank cartridge in a gun to be used on her husband in the last scene of their last picture together. It is a two-barrelled gun and the fatal shot is reserved—by Fate and the plot—for the comedian, whose director borrows the gun for a gag on another set.

The acting is mediocre, save for that of the hero, Brian Aherne. There are several remarkable effective photographic stunts employed in the course of the play. These are mainly the result of a mobile camera which follows action through space.

Drawing Power: Rather good if you can impress your patrons with fact that it is a story, a love story, dealing with film actors and having an interesting studio background. Exploitation Angles: For newspaper ads, the studio scenes and melodramatic climax; prominent part of lip stick in becoming mixed with fatal bullet may offer drug-store tie-up; divorce angle for newspaper or program essay contests.

THEME: A triangle melodrama with a film studio background in which the wife, a famous star, ends in obscurity following a tragic shooting at studio by substituting real for blank cartridge in prop gun.

Produced by British Instructional, Ltd., England. Distributed state rights in U. S. by Artlee Pictures Corp. Released April, 1928. Length, 5,880 feet. The Cast: Annette Benson, Brian Aherne, Donald Calthrop. Story by Anthony Asquith. Scenario by John Orton. Director, A. V. Bramble. American release edited and titled by Merritt Crawford.

Two Lovers

Big Production, Good Story

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS is one of those period pictures that goes back into the sixteenth century for its action. It is a bigger production than the title would imply, and, as a matter of fact, there is nothing about the picture that warrants any such title, for there is comparatively little of the ardent love exchanged that has characterized others of the Vilma Banky-Ronald Colman pictures.

It is far more melodramatic than romantic, for the romance is entirely one-sided until nearly the end of the film, at which time Miss Banky comes to realize that she loves Colman. Miss Banky, as usual, is beautiful, but she seems a trifle miscast as a Spaniard, and one cold in love at that. Colman gives a very impressive performance as the romantic and fighting Spaniard, both of which characteristics fit him to a nicety.

The story is a splendid one of its type and it is well directed, but it is questionable if it will have a tremendous audience appeal. It is brimful of melodrama, intrigue and suspense, but it goes a long way back for its melodramatic action in the overthrowing of the cruel Spanish Duke—which role is admirably played by Noah Beery—and the freeing of Flanders from Spanish dominance. There are many leisurely moments between the highlights, and the picture is rather slow in getting into its stride. On the whole though, it holds the interest through its intensely dramatic climax.

Drawing Power: Should do well largely because of the popularity of Miss Banky and Colman. Exploitation Angles: The names of the stars, the historical incidents and the tremendous production.

THEME: The Flower of Spain is compelled by her cruel uncle, the Duke, to marry the hero of Flanders that he might spy on a nationalist plot against the invaders. She marries reluctantly, eventually comes to love her husband and is the heroine of the invasion.

Produced by Samuel Goldwyn. Released by United Artists. Released August, 1928. Length, 8,500 feet. The Cast: Ronald Colman, Vilma Banky, Noah Beery, Nigel de Brulier, Virginia Bradford, Helen Jerome Eddy, Eugenie Besserer, Paul Lukas, Fred Esmelton, Harry Allen, Marcella Daly. Directed by Fred Niblo. Adapted from Baroness Orczy's novel, "Leatherface," by Alice D. G. Miller.

Stop That Man

Snappy, Effective Farce

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A FAST-MOVING farce and one that can be labeled as satisfying humor. There is not much letdown throughout its five and one-half reels. The gait is so geared that after the conclusion has been reached the onlooker is conscious of the fact that the piece has had flow and a fine welding together of gags and story. The players are good, their material is effective comedy and the tale is presented with deft, snappy touches.

Young Arthur Lake falls into a mess of trouble when he goes forth in public wearing the uniform of his brother, a cop. He drops his brother's badge in a house while helping a crook to enter therein. When some valuables are purloined the big brother is blamed for the robbery. His brother confronts arrest and the girl Arthur had been making a hit with grows cold so Arthur hires a thug to kill him, so great is his despondence. With the return of the girl Arthur's interest in life comes bubbling up again and resolutely determining to recover the stolen goods, capture the crook, free his brother of suspicion and win the girl in the bargain, he launches on a series of adventures in which his dream of becoming a hero is fulfilled.

Sparkling comedy.

Drawing Power: It is a bright, snappy comedy and should please the patronage of all houses. Exploitation Angles: Cops' billy, safe-cracking tools, etc., can be used to attract attention of passerby. Stage a "find the man" hunt. Use giant cut-outs of pointing hands on which is printed "Stop That Man."

THEME: Comedy of a young boy's troubles when he poses in public with his brother's police uniform to make a hit with his girl. Unwittingly he admits a crook into a house, which is later robbed. The brother is blamed as his badge is found in the house. The young fellow resolves to undo the damage he has wrought; after a tussle with the crook he recovers the money and everything turns out nicely.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Released, March, 1928. Length, 5389 feet. The Cast: Arthur Lake, Barbara Kent, Eddie Gribbon, Warner Richmond, Walter McGrail, Geo. Siegmann, Joe Girard. Story adapted from play by G. W. Hobart. Adaptation by Dick Smith. Director, Nat Ross

Should Be a Big Draw at Popular Prices

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE perennial favorite of the stage, "Abie's Irish Rose," has finally reached the screen, and despite its host of imitations that have gone celluloid the originator of them all easily scales the top. The play that floored the dramatic critics has been handled so that it will tug at all the emotions. Even the war is introduced in order that Abie and Rosie may develop their romance. This prelude to the love urge and the subsequent quarrels of the Murphys and Levys is exceptionally well done, ringing with touching pathos, humor, and free from sentimentalities.

Of course everyone has seen the play. Naturally the edge is taken off the picture. And if this wasn't enough the other Irish-Jewish stories have destroyed the suspense. Yet in spite of its familiarity it carries heart interest and romantic appeal—and good, sound characterization. The whole gist of it amounts to the youngsters attempting to deceive their parents. As a result three marital ceremonies are depicted.

It is too long and could be profitably shortened especially in the Christmas-tree sequence where the male parents shout "boo" at each other too often. But it packs a lot of fun, and contains a good vein of sentiment and pathos. As for the acting the film belongs to Jean Hersholt, whose study of the elder Levy is something to be recorded among the rare portraits of the screen. Nancy Carroll and Charles Rogers acquit themselves very capably as the youngsters, Farrell MacDonald does well as Murphy and the comedy relief is okay as handled by Bernard Gorcey and Ida Kramer. Altogether a first rate picture, though not belonging to the specials commanding top prices. It should make money for its sponsors.

Drawing Power: Should draw through fame of play, cast and if put out at popular prices. Exploitation Angles: The play, the racial conflict. The cast. The war scenes.

THEME: Comedy-drama of racial barrier swept away by youngsters of opposite faiths marrying and winning over their parents.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, 12,103 feet. Release date indefinite. The Cast: Jean Hersholt, Nancy Carroll, Charles Rogers, J. Farrell MacDonald, Bernard Gorcey, Ida Kramer, Nick Cogley, Camillus Pretal, Rosa Rosanova. Director, Victor Fleming.

"A Short Tail"

(Paramount—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THIS novelty is good enough to grace any exhibitor's program. With simplicity, a flair for artistry and a feel for the emotions, it tells the story of two little lost dogs who pal together while their owners broken-heartedly search for them. Unhampered by the absence of titles, the tale moves along in its appealing groove. The camera, which is never turned on the faces of the humans in the cast, captures with good effect the dogs' expressions, their wanderings along the streets and their lapping up the contents of a broken whiskey bottle with their subsequent intoxication. The dogs are an odd assorted pair—a petted peke and a terrier who had never known soft pillows and other luxuries. A nice little story, to say the least.

Under the Tonto Rim

Average Western

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THIS version of a Zane Grey story produced by Paramount shades the line of mediocrity so near does it hinge on conventional plot, conventional deeds of heroism and fair acting from the cast. It is just another western, replica of thousands of others which have preceded it. The name of Zane Grey, however, is a strong selling angle which the exhibitor should not overlook.

Richard Arlen and Mary Brian are the leads, Harry T. Morey the heavy and Jack Luden a sort of minor villain who reforms at the close. Arlen's dad had been slain years before by a gambler and the son has been seeking the killer for several years, but without any degree of success. Having staked a claim with other miners, Arlen's lot is threatened by a gang leader who has the keeper of the government register under his thumb. With the latter forced to do his will, the villain, who is really the killer, is fast hording up the claims until Arlen forms a vigilance committee and defeats his gang.

Drawing Power: For the average house. Exploitation Angles: The name of Zane Grey, the usual western action and the like.

THEME: Western action drama. His father slain by gambler, young westerner meets the killer years later when he is endeavoring to steal his claim. The villain has the keeper of the government records under his control, and for a time points all suspicion toward him. The hero eventually learns the identity of the villain and, after forming a vigilantes, defeats both him and his gang.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Released, February, 1928. Length, 5,991 feet. The Cast: Richard Arlen, Mary Brian, Jack Luden, Harry T. Morey, Harry Todd, William Franey, Bruce Gordon and Jack Byron. Zane Grey story scenarized by J. Walter Rubin. Director, Herman C. Raymaker.

Foreign Devils

A Fair Action Drama

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

TIM McCOY, Metro's Irish cowboy star, is the stalwart hero in this action story of the Boxer Rebellion in China. He performs like the usual western hero carrying on prodigious feats of valor, pitting nimble headwork and agility against hordes of Chinese. Action is planted in generous portions and the Chinese setting offers a relief from the usual doings of rustlers and bandits whose activities are always on parade in the western films.

A smattering of history flavors the scenes of the rebellion although it cannot be said that the Chinese empress at the time of the uprising is painted in a favorable light. There are plenty of battle scenes and physical encounters which McCoy does his share to make interesting. Claire Windsor decorates the scenes very nicely.

An attraction for houses other than first runs.

Drawing Power: Okay for neighborhood, second run and similar types of houses. Lovers of action should find it entertaining. Exploitation Angles: Different from the usual dried-in-the-wool action picture. Mention its historical incident which may prove of interest to school pupils. Press Chinese paraphernalia into service to create atmosphere.

THEME: Action drama. Attache at American Embassy in Peking at the time of the Boxer Rebellion becomes attached to an English lady. He rescues her from the hands of the priests of a Chinese temple which she has gone to visit, entrusts her to a friend to carry her to safety to the barricade and alone battles the Chinese until they have made their escape. Later on, he brings news to the barricade of the approach of the allies and subsequently wins the girl.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Released, September, 1927. Length, 4,658 feet. The Cast: Tim McCoy, Claire Windsor, Cyril Chadwick, Frank Currier, Emily Fitzroy, Lawson Butt, Sojin and F. Chew. Story by Peter B. Kyne. Continuity by Marian Ainslee. Director, W. S. Van Dyke.

The Wife's Relations

Bright Comedy

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

BEARING an inordinate assortment of comedy highlights, a sprightly story, capable performances, this little feature can be relied on to please the majority of fans. It mixes a deal of nonsense with a suspenseful plot, elicits laughs quite frequently and in general shapes up as good entertainment.

The daughter of a rich man runs away to escape an unwelcome marriage. While running an elevator she meets a young inventor and caretaker of an estate whom she falls in love with and marries. Shortly after the wedding the inventor finds the substance he has been searching for to perfect his varnish for automobiles, and the wife suggests inveigling her rich father to buy the process. They entertain her parents at dinner and are getting along very nicely in their bluff that they are well to do, and that the young man is just trying to get the father's interest in his invention as a matter of friendship. But their bluff is exposed by the owner of the house, the chap whom the girl left flat by running away, and it looks as if the father will refuse to back the invention which, however, does not come to pass.

Pep, snap and comedy mingling together in the various scenes make this a good picture.

Drawing Power: A suitable presentation for the screens of all houses. Exploitation Angles: The cast and comedy incident. Ben Turpin as the cook.

THEME: Young girl runs away from her wealthy home to escape marriage, but falls in love with a poor inventor and caretaker of a country estate. Having found the missing substance to make his invention a success, the young couple entertain the girl's father and are succeeding in getting his backing for the invention when the real owner of the house returns and unveils their bluff. However, the father likes his new son-in-law, and backs his invention.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Released, January, 1928. Length, 5,508 feet. The Cast: Shirley Mason, Gaston Glass, Ben Turpin, Arthur Rankin, Flora Finch, Lionel Belmore, Armand Kaliz, Maurice Ryan, Jas. Harrison. Story by Armand Kaliz. Director, Maurice Marshall.

Tenderloin

An Underworld Thriller

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE is always something fascinating about a crook and underworld melodrama and this one is no exception. With or without Vitaphone accompaniment it should prove a good audience picture, though the Vitaphone undoubtedly adds to its effectiveness. It helps to drive home more deeply some of the melodramatic sequences, of which there are an abundance. However, the Vitaphone is applied on only two or three occasions.

This is a picture of peaks; it jumps from one exciting climax to another until it seems as though it were interminable. In its high spots it is intensely interesting, but there is a lot in between the high spots that drags out more or less tiresomely and makes one wonder if he is going to be compelled to sit there through the duration of the sentence that is applied to the crooks. It would be a better picture if it were shorter, even at the expense of cutting out some of the highlights.

Dolores Costello, the cafe girl who is in love with Conrad Nagel, the hard hearted yegg who eventually goes straight for her, is as usual, delightful. She does some of her best work in this picture, though she is inclined to weep too frequently and too copiously in too many closeups. Nagel is excellent as the dapper yegg, while one of the best portrayals is that of Georgie Stone, as "Sparrow," Nagel's pal. The finish is effective with Rose, Chuck, Sparrow and Lefty singing "Sweet Adeline" on the Vitaphone.

Drawing Power: .Should prove a splendid draw in all types of houses whether accompanied by Vitaphone or not. Exploitation Angles: Play up the leading players and the many underworld thrills. The press book offers store tieup angles of many descriptions.

THEME: Cabaret girl falls in love with dapper crook, whose pals loot a bank and the proceeds of the robbery supposedly fall into the hands of the girl. The crook thinking she has the loot pretends to care for her to recover it, finds she knows nothing of it, really falls in love with her, goes straight and they are wedded.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Released April 28, 1928. Length, 653 feet. The Cast: Dolores Costello, Conrad Nagel, Mitchell Lewis, Georgie Stone, Dan Wolheim, Pat Hartigan, Fred Kelsey, G. Raymond Nye, Dorothy Vernon, Evelyn Pierce, John Miljan. Director, Michael Curtiz. Story by Melville Crosman. Scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr.

"Fighting Fanny"

(Paramount—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THIS Christie-produced comedy is fast and snappy in pace, gagged with a fairly amusing assortment of comedy incidents and made interesting through the fine comedy of Jack Duffy, who supports Ann Cornwall. The story deals with the activities of girl students and their hazing of Miss Cornwall. The high jinks of the girls are not particularly amusing; the best gag and one which is seen several times is that which follows the predicament of several characters, who sit in a trick chair and disappearing into its depths are dropped after a swift descent into a pool of water. Another comedy sequence deals with the star's athletic activities in a sports event in which another girl does her darndest to win a race. These two become rivals and eventually mix in a boxing contest.

"At It Again"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

MONTY COLLINS and Jack Miller are a co-starring team in this Mermaid written and directed by Norman Taurog with Lucille Hutton and Eva Thatcher in support. As comedy their efforts are fairly successfuly; boisterous, slapstick and knockabout, their antics will provoke laughter of a sort—not long, hearty laughter, rather intermittent chuckles or brief spurts of hilarity. This chap, Collins, is coming along with greater speed than any other comedian cavorting on the Educational lots.

They are starving, are Collins and Miller, and their endeavors to grab something eatable while in their boarding house is the cause for some merriment. Eventually going into the street they come across Miss Hutton, a department store girl threatened with the loss of her job unless she obtains some business. They decide to help her and with rotten eggs, over ripe fruit and vegetables they bombard passersby so that they are forced to seek a fresh supply of apparel in the nearby clothing store. Pursued by their victims they take refuge in a wind machine, and with the propellor roaring are taken aloft and introduce some more fairly good comedy while on their flight.

"Ruster's Whippet Race"
(Universal—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BUSTER, Mary Jane and Tige stir up a lot of trouble in this one and all but demolish the Brown household. Buster and Mary are busy getting Tige ready for the whippet race, but Papa Brown won't let them go until they straighten up the house. To hurry this Buster calls in his friends from the neighborhood and they make a mess of things before departing for the starting line.

There are dogs of every description entered in the race, in the course of which pedestrians are knocked down and traffic halted. In the final spurt the dogs dash through the window into the Browns' living room, and the disorder started previously, is completed. There is a lot of rough and tumble comedy in it, but much of a sameness throughout. Here and there a good laugh is injected, however. It is hardly up to the standard of some of the past ones of the series.

"Summer Knights"
(Universal—One Reel)

ARTHUR LAKE, featured in this comedy, and his pal, Buddy, get into difficulties when a bull terrier extracts the seat from Buddy's dress suit as they are on their way to a party. They decide to go with one suit between them, each to hide for an hour while the other dances and then to change. Buddy forgets at the conclusion of the first hour, so Arthur disguises himself as a girl and vamps him into the garden, where he proceeds to beat him up and take the suit. Buddy is left with his B. V. D.'s, while Arthur enjoys the rest of the dance. There are spots of comedy here and there, with the picture about up to the usual standard of the series.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Never Too Late"
(Educational—One Reel)

A DO-OR-DIE attempt at humor is made in this Cameo starring Wallace Lupino with Jack Miller and Robert Burns. The picture is no sooner under way than one of the characters gets his face smeared with ink—a pathetic brand of comedy in constant evidence through the course of the reel. Lupino has some moments for solo comedy but his gags are of a thin texture and his efforts, generally, fall flat. He is a clerk in a department store who is threatened with the loss of his job because of recurring lateness. The next A. M., after a frantic effort to appear on time, he arrives at the store only to discover that it is Sunday. An intelligent dog enlightens the scenes.—RAYMOND GANLY.

Newsreel Resume

Competition was keen among the newsreels during the past week, each vieing with the other to secure the first moving pictures of Koehl and Huensfeld on Greenely Island and Fitzmaurice on his arrival in Quebec. Two of the reels—Paramount and Pathe scored over the others as they had moving pictures of the Germans and the Irishman, respectively, on Broadway before their competitors. Ray Fernstrom, a Paramount cameraman, got through to the haven of the Bremen after having filmed Fitzmaurice at Quebec and then winged his way back to New York bearing the precious negative which Paramount released in the form of a 500-foot special. Also showing a startling rapidity in getting news pictures before the public was Pathe, whose cameraman, Tom Hogan, obtained a camera interview with Fitzmaurice in Quebec and flew back to New York in time for ripe showings along the rialto.

The other reels were also active. Through an arrangement with Acme News Service, still shots of the Bremen fliers marooned on Greenely Island were released via the films. Quebec is much more accessible than the remote Greenely Island and so practically all of the reels had shots of the arrival of the relief plane from New York, views of Floyd Bennett, who was later to so tragically pass away, and shots of Fitzmaurice and his welcome by Miss Herta Junkers. Pathe also had scenes of the Bremen's take-off for America from Dublin and Lindbergh's mercy flight.

Another aviation story which broke before the hue and cry of the Bremen's flight had died down was the flight of Captain Wilkins over the polar wastes. M-G-M News, Kinograms and International had pictures of Wilkins and his plane in Alaska. Another competitive period is undoubtedly ahead with the various reels each trying to be the first to release camera stories of Captain Wilkins at Spitzbergen.

A brief synopsis of the contents of each reel follows:

Atlanta

THE Rialto theatre, Atlanta, is preparing to step out with new and important changes in policy and presentation. Most important will be the acquisition of Vitaphone and Movietone. Mechanical equipment for both these sound-reproducing devices is now being installed by expert engineers. Only first run pictures of the major classification will find bookings at the Rialto henceforth.

Vitaphone made its debut in Macon, Ga., at the Rialto, a Publix theatre, Monday, April 16, and scored an unqualified success.

John M. Johnson, owner of the Colonial theatre, Jasper, Ala., will begin construction of a new theatre there within the next few days.

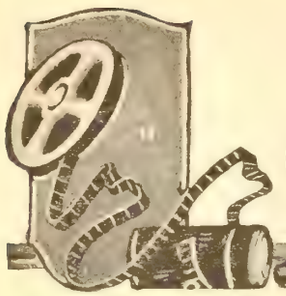
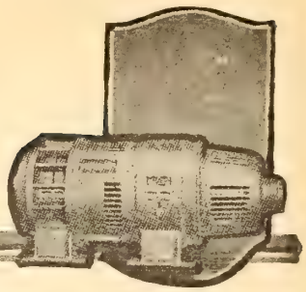
The Russell Theatre at Ottawa, which with the Russell Hotel was recently expropriated by the Canadian Government for $1,250,000 for park purposes, had a spectacular demise when a fire of unknown origin destroyed the hotel property on the night that the theatre closed its doors for keeps. The fire broke out about one hour after the final performance.



The Wonderland Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, was visited by fire, caused by defective wiring, late at night while the theatre was empty, causing damage to the extent of $400 to the stage and screen. F. R. Hyde is the owner of the theatre and Henry Morton is the lessee. The theatre was temporarily closed.

Henry Morton has added the Arlington Theatre to his chain of houses in Winnipeg, Manitoba, comprising the Gaiety, Crescent, Carleton and Wonderland. Harry Horwitz, nephew of Mr. Morton, has become the proprietor of the Park Theatre, Winnipeg.

L. C. Straw, formerly manager of the Colonial Theatre, Port Arthur, Ontario, has been appointed manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, one of the big houses of Famous Players Canadian Corp., in succession to E. A. Retallick, a former Winnipeg newspaperman.



Mr. Straw also had charge of the Lyceum Theatre in Port Arthur. His place at the two theatres has been taken by A. G. Graburn who has been with theatres in Regina and Moose Jaw, being manager of the Strand and Regent Theatres in Calgary, Alberta, for the past two years.

Spyros Megalacakis, partner of A. Capadrites, proprietor of the Cameo theatre, Montreal, died at his home at the Saybrooke apartments, Montreal, April 16th, of pneumonia, after a brief illness of one week. The funeral was held last Wednesday at his home and interment was made at Mount Royal cemetery.

Inquiries and Comments

The Value of Theatre Tests

A PROJECTIONIST in West Virginia recently wrote to us stating that his employer was seriously contemplating the purchase of two special shutters for which a twenty per-cent increase in light transmission was claimed. He asked for a frank expression of our opinion of these shutters saying that while the salesman had willingly demonstrated their operation by attaching them to the projector, he believed the results, considered from all angles, did not fully justify the claims.

The "test" which was made was simply a visual comparison of the lighted screens obtained with one projector equipped with the new shutter and the other projector using the ordinary form of two-blade shutter.

In view of the fact that the light sources in each case were arc lamps and, furthermore, that the test was conducted under the ordinary operating conditions in the theatre by persons who can hardly be said to be experienced in conducting such tests, the results would not be likely to possess enough significance to permit rendering a decision either for or against the new shutters.

Theatre Tests Usually Unfair

It frequently happens that theatre owners, when approached by equipment salesmen, ask for a practical demonstration in the theatre, thinking that, thereby, they can immediately prove or disprove the claims of the salesmen on the basis that "seeing is believing." The salesman, convinced of the merits of his article, all too willingly agrees to such a demonstration, since, in fact, it usually is the only means available to him for proving his statements.

And so a "test" is speedily arranged for on the spot, the parties thereto being the salesman, the exhibitor and his projectionist. Needless to say, such "tests" ordinarily prove nothing unless the article in question stands head and shoulders above the equipment being used by the exhibitor. This, for the reason that none of the persons are sufficiently experienced to be able to conduct the test in a fashion which will assure absolute equality of all the side factors present so that any difference in the results obtained can be positively attributed to the two devices being tested. Illumination tests are particularly treacherous in this respect and it is safe to say that there are less than a dozen projectionists in this country who are qualified to conduct any illumination test with any degree of certainty that the results will be a true reflection of the actual characteristics of the tested equipment.

So-called practical theatre tests, therefore, are unfair to both parties. They are unfair to the salesman because his device may really be a meritorious one, and yet the test may fail to reveal it as such. They are equally unfair to the exhibitor because he may be led into making a decision which will cause him to condemn a deserving piece of equipment or, on the other hand, may cause him to purchase something which is no better than the thing he may be using. Depending upon how the test is conducted, it may show up a good device to poor advantage or a bad device to good advantage. And yet neither side may be aware of the fact that anything is off-color.

Expert Knowledge Is Required

As stated before, tests of this kind are exceedingly tricky, and no matter how well-intentioned both sides may be and how sincere each is to obtain an honest decision, things are certain to go awry unless someone possessing considerable experience in such matters is on the job to cast a fishy eye on all factors which are likely to influence the results. Even the presence of one or more persons with a plentiful stock of experience to their credit is no guarantee that the results will be truthful because the writer can recall quite a number of tests, some conducted by experts, which were believed by all parties to be absolutely fair, only to find, after a searching analysis of the data, that factors had been overlooked which, had they been considered when the test was being conducted, would have completely changed the complexion of the results.

Even some laboratory tests, where every facility for such work was available, were found to be incorrect and so easy is it to slip up in this respect that the honest investigator overlooks no item in the test in order to insure that his conclusions will be based upon fact and not upon supposition.

Indeed, the planning and preliminary work frequently constitute the greatest part of the effort since the actual work of testing is a simple mechanical routine once the objectives and the methods for reaching them are thoroughly understood.

When experienced investigators who are everyday occupied with such test work are faced with the probability of serious error, what chance have inexperienced ones such as exhibitors, projectionists, and equipment salesmen, for obtaining true results, especially when they are compelled to work in the theatre where only the equipment incidental to the everyday operation of the theatre is available.

So true is this that many manufacturers are extremely reluctant to broadcast the intimate test figures on the characteristics of their products for fear that projectionists will attempt to check these figures and, failing to do so because of their lack of experience and proper equipment, will try to hold the manufacturer responsible for their failure, thinking that the quality of the product is not as represented.

This is particularly true in the case of those manufacturers engaged in making light sources, such as carbons and incandescent lamps. The burning life of a particular carbon or incandescent lamp is, at best, but problematical. No one is able to say, beyond guessing, just how long one of these will burn because their life is absolutely at the mercy of electrical conditions under which they are burned. It is only by means of endless tests, conducted day in and day out, that figures can be obtained which closely show the average burning life of the various types of incandescent lamps and the manufacturers, only too well, the vast amount of work required in obtaining these figures and the skill required of the investigators do not relish the idea of placing themselves at the mercy of any inexperienced person who may conceive the brilliant thought of performing his own tests, which would certainly result from a publication of such detailed information.

An Arbiter of Tests

It frequently happens that the claims of two competing manufacturers of electrical equipment may honestly conflict whereupon a third party is called in to ascertain the true state of affairs. This third party is the Electrical Testing Laboratories in New York City, and it is their work to test the equipment thoroughly and then render an absolutely unpartial report for the information of the respective manufacturers.

A manufacturer's report from the Electrical Testing Laboratories is an indisputable notice to purchasers that the particular equipment is exactly as represented.

It is only by means of these, or similar tests, that actual performance can be accurately judged.

Society of Motion Picture Engineers Ends Lively Conference in Los Angeles

THE Society of Motion Picture Engineers ended its Spring conference at the Hotel Roosevelt in Los Angeles over the past week-end. A wide variety of subjects was covered during the week of the sessions and the convention was voted one of the best ever held by the society.

One of the big announcements made during the week was that $1,000,000 would be spent the first year in installing a research laboratory to be sponsored by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and financed by the Motion Picture Producers Association. A specialist will be engaged this month to serve as research director. This announcement was made at the banquet tendered the engineers by the Academy.

Fred Niblo acted as toastmaster at the banquet, at which Louis B. Mayer highly praised motion picture technicians for the work they have accomplished. President Daniel B. Clark told of the aims of the cinematographers, while other subjects were discussed by Willard B. Cook, Milton Sills, Dr. C. E. K. Meers and L. A. Hawkins.

Among subjects discussed at late sessions of the conference were the following:

"Theatre Management," by Harold B. Franklin, West Coast Theatres, Inc., Los Angeles.

"Continuous Projectors," by J. F. Leventhal, New York.

"The Importance of Good Projection to the Seating Capacity of the Theatre" and "Application of the Tandem Condenser to the High Intensity Projection Arc," by Roger M. Hill, Consulting Engineer, Atlanta.

"The Effect of Projecting Angle Upon the Producer," by F. H. Richardson, New York.

"Hollywood and the 16 mm. Film," by J. B. Carrigan, Editor, "Amateur Movie Makers."

"The Incandescent Tungsten Lamp in the Motion Picture Studio," by F. A. Benford, General Electric Co., Schenectady.

"The Use of Incandescent Equipment in Motion Picture Photography," by Peter Mole, president, Mole-Richardson, Inc., Hollywood.

"Report on Experiments on Mazda Lighting," sponsored by the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences and prepared by the Research Committee of the Society of Cinematographers.

"The Aperture of Motion Picture Lenses," by J. Dubray, Technical Editor, "American Cinematographer."

"Camera Lenses for Motion Picture Photography," by W. B. Rayton, Director of Research, Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., Rochester.

Atlantic City Movie to Be Stanley Controlled

A NEW theatre that will represent an investment of nearly $4,000,000 and which will adjoin Shelburne Hotel at the corner of Arkansas Avenue on the Boardwalk at Atlantic City, will be begun July 15 of this year for opening for the season of 1929. The new addition to the resort's theatres will be controlled by the Stanley Company of America, a long term lease having been entered into with the purchaser of the property at an aggregate rental of more than $3,000,000, it is said. The theatre is to seat 5,000 and to occupy a site 200 feet by 400 feet.

The sale was made by the Lansdowne Realty Corporation and Frank P. Gravatt, through the Stanley-Atlantic Realty Company co-operating with Mastbaum Brothers and Fleicher and Joseph Bernhard. The purchaser is Boardwalk Properties Company.

New Boston House; Keith's Nearly Completed

Boston is to have a $300,000 new theatre in the Huntington avenue district in the Back Bay. The owner's name is withheld at present, but it is understood that it is being erected for one of the large theatre chains. Max M. Kalman, 294 Washington street, Boston, is drawing the plans for the structure and the plans will probably be ready for contractors' estimates about the

The new Keith Memorial Theatre in Boston is nearing completion, and practically all of the exterior work has been completed. It will take a considerable length of time to complete the interior details. No date has been set for opening of the playhouse, but it would not be surprising if it was opened late in the Fall or early in the Winter.

New Simplex Stands At Capitol Theatre

The Capitol Theatre of Broadway has always put the greatest emphasis on its projection department, never hesitating to experiment and try out new equipment as well as installing the latest approved designs in order to assure the finest projection results.

A new addition has been made to the projection department of this theatre which is tending to improve even the Capitol projection. This equipment is the new Simplex stand, an improvement for Simplex Projectors which has just been announced by the International Projector Corporation. This new stand represents a decided advance in projector designs and has for its main function the elimination of all unsteadiness caused by excessive weights of the modern designs in arc lamps and other auxiliary equipment which is now being placed on projectors. A full technical description of the new Simplex stand will be published in the Showman Section next week.

Studio Briefs

Three new productions were finished last week at the Warner Studio on the Coast. They were "The Land of the Silver Fox," "State Street Sadie" and "No Questions Asked."

G. Pat Collins, who played the role of the cop who is slain in the police station in the stage production of "The Racket," replaces Warner Richmond in the cast of the Caddo unit making the picture for Paramount. Henry Sedley will be one of the heavies.

Anita Stewart will make her Columbia debut as the feminine lead in "The Way of the Strong," a mystery story. Director and cast are now under consideration.

Ludwig Berger will direct Pola Negri in "Fedora" for Paramount. Norman Kerry will have the leading male role. Paul Lucas, Lawrence Grant, Jack Luden and Otto Mattieson will have parts. John Farrow has written the continuity.

Douglas Gerrard will impersonate Al Jolson in a cafe scene in "Ladies of the Night Club," a Tiffany-Stahl production.

Warner Bros. will loan Louise Fazenda to First National for a role in "Once There Was a Princess," which William Beaudine will direct. At present she is working in "Noah's Ark."

Edmund Burns, William V. Mong and Blue Washington will support Lois Wilson in Columbia's "Ransom," adapted from the story "San Francisco."

Gertrude Olmstead will be leading lady in "Green Grass Widows," the Tiffany-Stahl film in which Walter Hagen, the golf champ, plays his first screen role. Others in the cast are Hedda Hopper, John Harron, Lincoln Stedman, Albert Conti and Ray Hallor.

"Women They Talk About" is the revised title Warner Bros. have chosen for the picture formerly called "Handle with Care," starring Irene Rich.

Myrna Hoffman is being featured in a new Tiffany-Stahl Color Classic entitled "Tom, Dick or Harry." Mark Goldaine is directing, and the story is by E. Morton Hough. Rene Alsace is the male lead.

"Free Lips," the story Wallace McDonald will direct for First Division, is an original by Raymond Wells, who is also preparing the continuity. Ray Heinz will be in charge of the picture, planned as a special. Jack Fuqua will do the camera work.

Mary Alden has been assigned two new roles by Paramount. The first, a character part, will be in "Ladies of the Mob," and the second, a mother role, in "The Sawdust Paradise." Carl Gerard has joined the cast of the first production.

"Fools in the Fog" is the final title selected by Warner Bros. for their picture titled "Fog Bound."

Percy Marmont will play the lead in the First Division picture temporarily titled "The Bum," which will be the first picture to be placed in production by the company for next season. Marmont will start work in June.

Betty Bronson will have a featured role in M-G-M's "The Bellamy Trial," for which a score of reporters and special writers have been borrowed from Los Angeles papers for the courtroom scenes. New additions to the cast are Charles Middleton, Lee Moran, Jacqueline Gadsdon, William Tooker, Charles Mailes and Robert Dudley.

Joan Crawford will play opposite John Gilbert in M-G-M's "Four Walls," shortly to go into production under the direction of William Nigh.

"His Tiger Lady" has been selected as the title for a new Adolphe Menjou starring vehicle for Paramount. It was formerly known as "A Date With a Duchess."

Marion Douglas, in private life the wife of Director Al Rogell, will play the Australian heroine in the new M-G-M feature, "The Bushranger," instead of Gloria Grey. Dale Austen, Miss New Zealand, is a member of the cast besides Russell Simpson, Arthur Lubin and Edward A. Brady.

"Hot News" is the title announced by Paramount for Bebe Daniels' new starring vehicle. The previous title was "The News Reel Girl." Chester Conklin will be featured also.

Loretta Young, one of First National's newer contract players, will be feminine lead in "The Head Man."

Hoot Gibson, Universal star, has begun a new western for next season. "Clearing the Trail" is the title. A screen version of "Danger Street" went into production last week at the F B O studio. In supporting roles are Duke Martin, Frank Mills, Bob Perry, Harry Allen Grant and Ole M. Ness.

A number of new names were added this week by Warner Bros. to the cast of "Noah's Ark." Nigel de Brulier, William V. Mong, Armand Kaliz and Malcolm Waite have been chosen to portray character parts. Gustav von Seyffertitz has withdrawn because of illness.

Al Cohn, scenarist, has signed with Al Christie to do the adaptations and scenarios of stories being obtained for Christie-Douglas MacLean feature productions to be made for Paramount release. Production on the first of these films will be started during June.

Preordained

"— the final result of the motion picture on the screen was preordained from the day that Edison got his first sample of Eastman film."*

That was in 1889. And today the film that made motion pictures practical is the film that makes the most of the cinematographer's art and carries all the quality through to the screen—Eastman Film.

THE WHOLE SHOW PROGRAM FOR 1928-29

Paramount Pictures

NEW PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Motion Picture Headquarters, West Coast. Administration Building, Paramount Studios, at Hollywood, Cal.

¶ 1928. A new world. New Fords in gay colors. Farmers playing golf. Flyers crossing the Atlantic. Old established businesses closing for failure to please the modern swift procession. New concerns leaping into amazing prosperity. ¶ 1928. A new world especially in the picture business. Audiences are smarter, pick-and-choosey. Ignoring ordinary pictures. Jamming theatres to see the new, unusual, daring, modern pictures. Discarding a former favorite star to rush to an Emil Jannings. Letting run-of-the-mill pictures die and patronizing a "Chang", an "Underworld" or a "Legion of the Condemned." ¶ Paramount sensed this long ago. Paramount geared up its production organization to produce exclusively modern-type pictures and stars. Results? Product like the pictures named above and "Last Command", "Way of All Flesh", "Beau Geste", and the "Speedy" of the always up-to-the-minute Harold Lloyd, topped all previous theatre grosses. Brilliant modern stars pushed other company's personalities into the background. ¶ The keen public of today saw the difference between Paramount Pictures and the other kind. Grosses on Paramount productions leaped so high above the rest of the field as to cause universal comment. ¶ Now 1928-9. A still newer world. Paramount is still a year or more ahead of other companies! Paramount production forces, under the master, Jesse L. Lasky, and the alert B. P. Schulberg, are working day and night to give you the brilliant, modern showmanship hits for a new world. . . . . .

HAROLD LLOYD

FOLLOWING "Speedy," now playing to packed houses everywhere, Harold Lloyd plans two big productions of his accustomed high standard during 1928-9. ¶"Lloyd tops the stars of all companies in drawing power," says Variety after its annual check-up of all theatre records. A mighty tribute. And true. ¶ You never know your theatre's real dollar capacity until you play Harold Lloyd. ¶ Lloyd pictures are produced by the Harold Lloyd Corporation, and released by Paramount • • •

SOUND EFFECTS! Before release to picture houses, "Wings" will be synchronized with music score and the sensational sound effects that have made its exhibition the talk of a ation. You get in your theatre exactly the same complete "Wings," with sound, as in the $2 triumph! . . . . .

The Comedienne with Charm

BEBE DANIELS

"TAKE ME HOME"

and three more star hits

¶ Beautiful Bebe Daniels fills a unique and very lucrative niche in exhibitors' programs. She is the only comedienne on the screen today who can at the same time supply laughs and "it"—a combination which the public loves. ¶ Four especially attractive Daniels vehicles are planned for the coming season. ¶ "Take Me Home" (tentative title) is the first. Casts and production values will be poured into these pictures that should enable them to top the drawing power of even Miss Daniels' famous "The Campus Flirt." . . . . . .

THE STAR OF "UNDERWORLD" IN 4 STRONG DRAMAS

Public demand made George Bancroft a star. The taste of the day is for strong, red-meat film fare. Bancroft supplies it ideally. The same virility, big casts and elaborate production value will surround Bancroft pictures in 1928-9. Star pictures in the special class!

Paramount Pictures

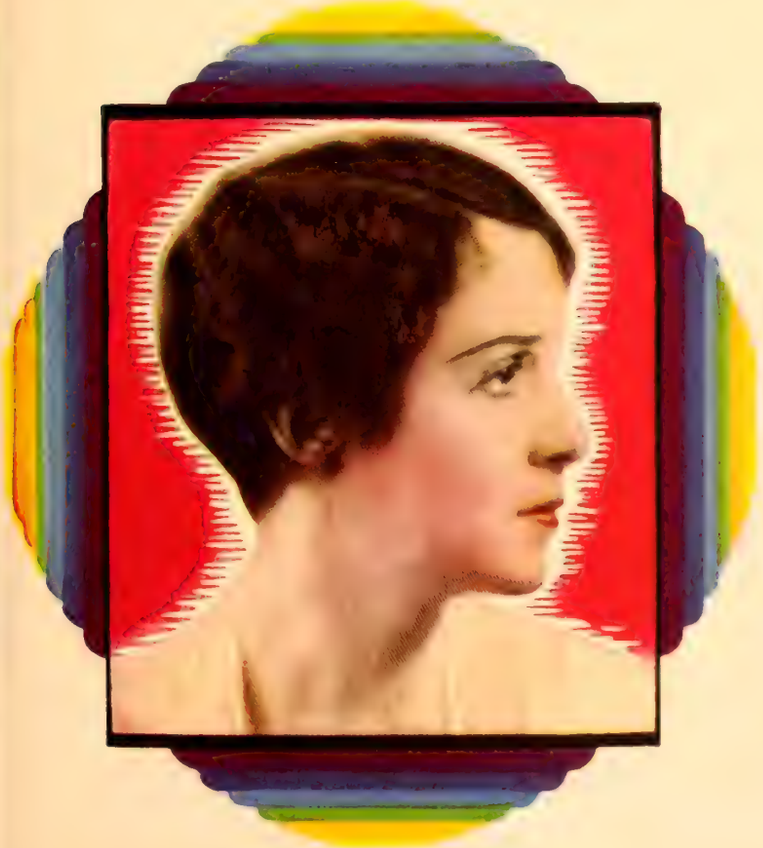
Three de Luxe Menjou Pictures in 1928-9

2 BIG CHRISTIE-MacLEAN SPECIALS



DOUGLAS MacLEAN

"WANTED: A WOMAN" Good news for exhibitors! The combined resources of the Douglas MacLean and the Christie brothers production staffs will be united to make two big feature pictures for Paramount release in 1928-29. ¶ The pictures will be of the same audience quality as MacLean's "The Hottentot" and Christie's "Charley's Aunt." ¶ The first MacLean-Christie release is tentatively titled "Wanted: A Woman." Big names will appear in the supporting cast and a well known director will be announced. Title of the second picture will be available soon. ¶ With the drawing power of MacLean's name and the unlimited production facilities back of him, a pair of knockout pictures is assured! . . . . . .

A DISTINCTIVE STAR IN TWO DE LUXE PICTURES . . . . .

SHORT FEATURES

¶ Paramount brought Paramount quality to the short features market for the first time in 1927-28. Releasing shorts that were not fillers but little-giant money makers through sheer entertainment merit. Capturing leadership in shorts as well as in features. ¶ Paramount News, Christie Comedies and the rest quickly proved the class of the industry. Exhibitors responded with enthusiasm. The volume of contracts and praise exceeded our fondest hopes. ¶ Paramount expresses its appreciation by offering for 1928-29 an even finer line-up of shorts. Read the following pages. They'll convince you that Paramount Short Features are again a mile ahead of the field! Paramount, the Whole Show!

today's news reel leader!

here are the reasons:

1 BUSINESS. Already more accounts playing Paramount News than most other news reels have taken a lifetime to get. Business growing steadily, week after week. • • • • • • •

2 RECORD. More scoops, more big specials, more locals during past year than any other reel.

3 ORGANIZATION. Worldwide. Headed by Emanuel Cohen, 13 years editor of Pathe News. Largest staff of expert cameramen in the business. Backed by mighty resources of Paramount. Special Paramount News building in New York with lightning-speed equipment. • • • • • • •

4 SPEED. All speed records broken because of ultra-modern set-up, faster methods than other reels. • • • • • •

5 SHOWMANSHIP. Breezy titles. Fast tempo. Colorful shots. What the public of today wants. • • • • • • •

6 ULTRA-MODERN. Paramount News competes with no old-fashioned news reel or news reels working on old lines. Paramount News is different. As different as television is from pony express. Up to the second, progressive. In a class by itself. THE NEWS REEL OF TODAY! • •

If it's news, Paramount News will have it on your screen— first and best.

TWICE-A-WEEK

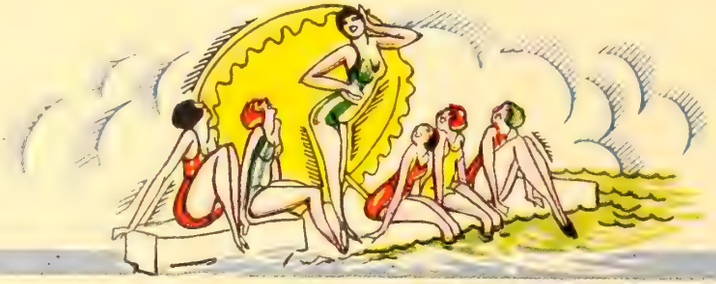
showmen hail its merit!

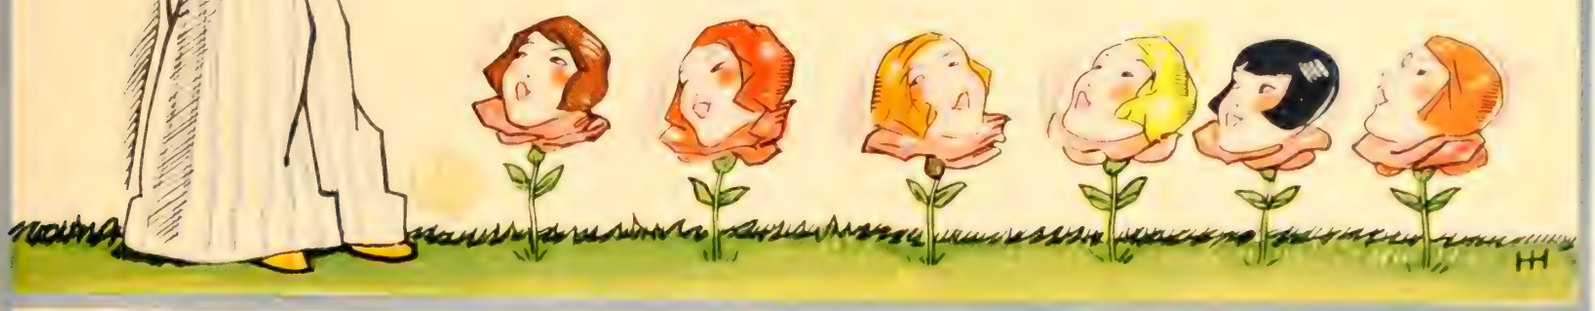
"The outstanding film event of 1927-8 is the way Paramount News leaped into first place among the news reels," says a leading exhibitor. "My people tell me they did not know a news reel could be so amazingly good!" Thousands of showmen echo this opinion—and back it up with contracts. • •

PARAMOUNT NEWS



Paramount News stations girdle the civilized globe.

Good as it was in 1927-8, Paramount News plans for 1928-9 are even more startling! Paramount is out to clinch first place in the news reel business forever. Nothing can stop us. High-powered national advertising will spread still further the merits of THE NEWS REEL LEADER. Paramount News is vital to the success of the modern showman. The one indispensable news reel! • • • • • •



CHRISTIE COMEDIES are the class of the short features fun field. That's proven by exhibitor and audience reports and the widespread booking of the Christie product, especially in de luxe houses. "Best theatres everywhere" is more than a slogan; it's a fact. ¶ Christie stars, backed by performance and years of national advertising, are as popular with the public as the top-notchers among the feature stars. Personalities like Bobby Vernon, Billy Dooley and Jack Duffy are greeted with roars whenever they bound upon the screen. Supporting players and particularly the famous Christie beauty brigade of gorgeous girls are favorites with all types of audiences. ¶ "A Christie comedy, Paramount News, a stage show and a feature make the ideal bill for a de luxe theatre," says Ed Beatty, general manager of the Butterfield Circuit, and smart showmen agree. ¶ Christie set new high comedy standards in 1927-8; the 1928-9 line-up of Paramount-Christie product promises to surpass this. Four series of eight releases each are outlined on the following pages. ¶ Look them over. They're the best comedy product that will be offered you during the coming season by anybody. They're the class of the market!

BOBBY VERNON
Comedies

EIGHT boisterous burlesques and fun frolics from the College Cut Comedian. Vernon is the perfect comedy type—the little guy who gets kicked around. Teamed with bouncing Bobby is Eddie Baker, the big fellow with the big wallop. With pretty Patricia Archer, "Miss Personality," as leading woman. Also Hannah "Oatmeal" Washington, a dark "chile," Gloria Killian, Virginia Sale and others. ¶ Vernon plays more de luxe houses than practically any other two-reel comedian in the business! • • • •

BILLY DOOLEY
Comedies

EIGHT more from the goofy gob, the dippy diver, Billy Dooley. His funny sailor suit is greeted with roars whenever he ambles into view. "Dooley is the most popular comedian in the field of shorts. They keep asking for him. Give us more," writes one big first-run exhibitor. ¶ Well, here's more, brother — and how! Dooley is supported, as of yore, by luscious Vera Steadman. Also "Admiral" Bill Blaisdell, Mary Ashley, Shirley Collins and a shipload of nautical but nice beauties. • • •

ADVENTURES OF SANDY MACDUFF

JACK DUFFY

PLENTY of Scotch jokes—now the first series of rollicking Scotch comedies. With the famous "grandpop with young ideas." They'll love fighting, spendthrift Sandy Macduff. Supported by Neal Burns, Joan Marquis, Eddie Barry, Bill Irving, Doris Martel and others. 8 releases. • • • •

CONFESSIONS OF A CHORUS GIRL

Fun spiced with peaches, sugar daddies, high jinks and merriment. • • • • • • • • •

FACTS

One of the oldest and largest theatre circuits* in the country has selected Motion Picture News and entered subscriptions for every one of its 80 theatres. If the manager of any one of these theatres wishes to take any other trade paper they must, themselves, pay for the subscription.

An important circuit* with headquarters in a key city sends fifteen subscriptions to Motion Picture News —one for circuit headquarters, one for the general manager's home, and thirteen for the managers of each chain theatre. Along with this order went cancellations of subscriptions to all other trade papers. The General Manager explains that he selected the News because it is the best paper, because it gives comprehensive service, and that he wants this one paper only in his managers' hands so as to have uniformity of thought and action.

The Industry's Advance Agent

Trade Paper Advertising and the Film Salesman

With a Foreword By William A. Johnston

I AM substituting for an editorial already written for this issue, a statement from an experienced salesman of film; it is the result of years of contact with the exhibitor, and the latter, I am sure, will read it with interest and regard it as a practical presentment of a much misunderstood problem:

We who form the personal contact end of the business of supplying the public with the most satisfactory form of entertainment ever invented are in a position to estimate at its full value the work of the advertising and publicity men. Every wide-awake film salesman is especially interested in his company's estimate of the value of trade paper advertising of the new product which is about to be put on the exhibitor market —for the trade paper either is his invaluable advance agent, or a total loss.

If it presents to the exhibitor early and attractive information about the new pictures, the salesman's work is half done before he presents himself on the scene. If the home office has not attended to this important detail, the salesman "opens cold." He must begin at the beginning, using such information as the branch office is able to supply him with, and probably multiply his visits to an individual customer when one visit should be sufficient to close the deal.

Every unnecessary visit to a given exhibitor represents an inexcusable addition to the normal and proper expense of selling a picture or a group of pictures. Any oversight at the home or branch office which results in piling up the expense of delivering film reacts in the direction of increasing film rentals. Thus the exhibitor himself ultimately is a loser through no fault of his own, and not a willing one—as all salesmen are only too well aware.

Emphasis is here placed on the trade paper as a medium for this service because it cannot be successfully denied that the important national trade organs of the motion picture industry have progressed side by side with the industry itself. The leading ones are not only subscribed for by all enterprising theatre owners or managers, but eagerly scanned as soon as received for news about the latest picture releases which they feel they can rely on. If they have already bought this product, they want to be reassured regarding its probable appeal to their patrons; if they have not yet bought it, naturally they want to satisfy themselves whether or not they owe it to their patrons to make room for it on their booking sheet.

When such information, either in the shape of advertising displays or news matter, is supplied by a responsible trade periodical with fixed dates of publication, it has much more weight with the exhibitor than the same information circulated independently by the interested producer-distributor. And at this early stage of the placing of untried product the salesman's chief interest in advertising is in the kind that bears directly on the making of the film contract. Later on he will take the next advertising step; he will endeavor to make his exhibitor customer satisfied with his bargain by joining him in advertising and publicity to the consumer, the theatre patron.

Film salesmen have reached two important conclusions with respect to the use of trade paper space. First, they consider it essential in effectively presenting the company's formal announcement of the coming year's list of new product—infinitely more effective than the independent issue of the costliest and most attractive art catalogues; so useful, in fact, and convincing, that they would abandon the latter as representing unwarranted expense. Second, owing to the meager information supplied by the production department for the general announcement, they point to the advantage and actual need of a series of subsequent displays on small groups and individual pictures whenever detailed information is forthcoming.

Nowadays exhibitors do not have to be told that the initial announcement of a new season's product is apt to bristle with tentative titles for the simple reason that production of those items on the list will not begin for several weeks yet to come. To the same circumstance is due the lack of certainty about stars and the make-up of supporting casts. Even the settlement of the story question is not always definite at the time of the original announcement.

But this information is all the more acceptable to the exhibitor prospect owing to the interest, or curiosity, that has been created by the many pages of art

Paramount Plans 72 Features

Schedule Includes 25 Specials, 35 Starring Offerings, 11 Outside Productions, 3 Road Shows

PARAMOUNT has definitely decided upon a production schedule of 74 feature length pictures for the 1928-1929 season. This group is made up of 25 special features, 35 starring offerings, 11 pictures made by outside producers releasing through Paramount, and 3 road show productions.

For the portrayal of these stories, such Paramount stars as Clara Bow, Emil Jannings, Richard Dix, Adolphe Menjou, Bebe Daniels, George Baneroft and Wallace Beery will be augmented by the graduation of a number of young players into stardom as a result of their work in the company's features during the past year.

Among these new luminaries who will be starred or featured during the new season are, Charles Rogers, who will be starred in a series of four, Fay Wray and Gary Cooper, who will be starred in a series of three, and Ruth Taylor of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" fame, and James Hall, who will be co-featured in three comedy-melodramas. Other young players who will be given more important roles in the new program are: Richard Arlen, Mary Brian, Nancy Carroll, Lane Chandler, Ivy Harris, Doris Hill, Jack Luden and Iris Stuart.

The following directors are under contract to the company; Ernst Lubitsch, Joseph von Sternberg, William Wellman, Clarence Badger, Harry D'Arrast, Gregory La Cava, Hobart Henley, Rowland V. Lee, Mal St. Clair, Frank Tuttle and John Waters.

Among the authors whose works will form the basis for Paramount pictures are: Owen Davis, Richard Washburn Child, John Monk Saunders, James Montgomery Flagg, W. Somerset Maugham, Edna Ferber, Elinor Glyn, George S. Kaufman, Jim Tully, Ernest Vajda, Dana Burnet, Tristram Tupper, Anne Nichols and S. S. Van Dine.

Three Road Shows

Clara Bow, Richard Dix and Esther Ralston will be starred in a number of special productions in addition to the regular program pictures they will make. Wallace Beery will also make two specials.

The list of feature length productions so far arranged for the new season includes the following:

There will be three road shows: "The Patriot," an Ernst Lubitsch production starring Emil Jannings, with a supporting cast including Florence Vidor, Lewis Stone and Neil Hamilton. The story deals with the life of the mad Czar Paul of Russia.

The second road show is "Wings," about which little need be said because it has already demonstrated its right to be included in the class of road shows through its box-office performance at the Criterion Theatre, New York City, and elsewhere throughout the world.

"Abie's Irish Rose," third of the trio, is now being shown at the 44th Street Theatre, New York City. Victor Fleming directed the picture version under the supervision of Anne Nichols. The cast includes Jean Hersholt, Charles Rogers, Nancy Carroll, J. Farrell McDonald, Nick Cogley, Rosa Rosanova, Camillus Pretal, Ida Kramer and Bernard Gorcey.

Among the special productions which Paramount will release during the coming season are:

"The Wedding March," with Erich von Stroheim as author, producer and star, and with Fay Wray featured. Principal players in support include Zazu Pitts, Maude George, Dale Fuller, Mathew Betz, George Fawcett, George Nichols, Cesare Gravina, Hughie Mack.

Jannings will make two other special productions. One, "The Man Who Never Missed," an adaptation of the Red Book serial by Mildred Cram, directer by Lothar Mendes. The next is "Ellis Island."

First of the Wallace Beery specials will be "Beggars of Life," a picturization of the Jim Tully story in which Beery will do a heavy role, his first in a long time. The story will be adapted for the screen by Benjamin Glazer, and William Wellman, "Wings" director, will guide Beery through his business. In the cast will probably be Louise Brooks and Richard Arlen.

"The Tong War" will be the other starring special, with the star again in a heavy role. The picture will tell the inside story of the Chinatown tong war, white slaves, loves and battles.

Canary Murder Case Filmed

"The Canary Murder Case," based on the murder of a famous Broadway beauty, will also be a Paramount special. William Powell will be featured in the role of Philo Vance, the scientific detective who solves the murder case. The story is by S. S. Van Dine.

200 Short Subjects Planned by Paramount for '28-'29

PARAMOUNT has arranged a schedule which provides for the release of approximately 200 short subjects during the 1928-29 season. This program will include 104 issues of Paramount News, 32 two-reel Christie comedies, two two-reel Edward Everett Horton comedies, 26 one-reel Krazy Kat cartoons, 26 one-reel Inkwell Imps cartoons and 12 two-reel "Great Stars and Authors."

The Christie product will be produced in two studios, at the original Christie plant and at the new studio at Studio City. There will be two novel series in this Christie output, both of them made up of two-reelers, one under the general brand of "The Confessions of a Chorus Girl," with a group of eight stories, and the other, "Sandy McDuff Comedies," also eight in number.

Frances Lee will be featured in the "Chorus Girl" series and the supporting casts will include Nancy Dover, Billie Engle, Lorraine Eddy, Jimmie Harrison, Jane Laurell, Betty Lorraine and many others.

The "Sandy MacDuff Comedies" will be a series of Scotch stories with Jack Duffy in the name role. Duffy's supporting casts will include the comedians, Neal Burns, Eddie Barry and a new leading lady, Joan Marquis, who recently graduated from the Christie beauty brigade.

Bobby Vernon will start his tenth year with the Christies, making a series of 8 two reel comedies of the same type as in the past. He will select a new leading lady from the Christie aggregation.

Billy Dooley starts his third season with the Christies and will be seen in a series of 8 two reel comedies. He will continue his role of "sap sailor." Sid Smith, Bill Blaisdell, Vera Steadman, Mary Ashley and Shirley Collins will constitute his major support.

The two Edward Everett Horton two reel comedies, produced by Hollywood Productions, will bear the titles, "Call Again" and "Vacation Waves."

Emanuel Cohen, Director of the Paramount Short Feature Department, has arranged with Eugene Spitz, producer, to release a series of twelve two reel pictures which will bear the brand name, "Great Stars and Authors."

By an agreement between Spitz and the Actor's Fund and Author's League of America, Spitz will have the stories of such fictionists as, Rita Weiman, George Ade, Fanny Hurst, etc., and such stars of the legitimate stage as Jane Cowl, Lenore Ulric, Holbrook Blinn, Catherine Cornell and many others of equal importance. The pictures are being made at the Cosmopolitan studios in New York and will be elaborately produced.

The first of the series, "Two Masters," has been finished. The story is an original by Rita Weiman and the cast includes Mary Eaton, star of "The Five O'Clock Girl," now running in New York City, Rex Cherryman, leading man in "The Trial of Mary Dugan," another New York stage success, Guy Bates Post, Carroll McComas, Clark Silvernail, Minnie Dupree, Tammany Young, Eddie Nelson, Jenny Eustace, Ann Sutherland and Eddie Robbins.

Paramount has contracted with Commander Byrd for the exclusive pictures of Byrd's Antarctic expedition. Two Paramount cameramen will accompany Byrd and make a motion picture record of the expedition.

Paramount has renewed its contract with Charles B. Mintz for the release of a series of 26 one reel "Krazy Kat" cartoons. This is the same number contracted for on the present season's program.

Paramount has also renewed with Max Fleischer for another series of 26 one reel "Inkwell Imps" cartoons featuring the cartoon character "Koko" and his dog.

M-G-M Announces New Schedule

Company Lays Plans to Produce Approximately 44 Pictures for the 1928-29 Season

DURING the coming year Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will produce and distribute approximately 44 pictures, according to announcement by Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's Inc., and of M-G-M. This is a reduction in quantity from the current season, but the stories were carefully selected as being best adapted to the interests of distributors and exhibitors, according to the announcement from the company.

The three outstanding productions on the new schedule will probably be "Show People," a King Vidor film co-starring Marion Davies and William Haines; "The Carnival of Life," a story with a Viennese setting, co-starring John Gilbert and Greta Garbo, under Clarence Brown's direction, and "The Loves of Casanova," a French production described as dealing with some of the romantic highlights in the career of the world's most famous philanderer.

Greta Garbo, who rose to stardom within such a brief period after coming to this country from Sweden, will appear in three individual starring productions during 1928-29, two of which will be "Tiger Skin," an original story for the screen by Elinor Glyn, and "The Single Standard," a picturization of the newspaper serial of that name by Adela Rogers St. John.

John Gilbert will be seen in "The Devil's Mask," a dramatic story of foreign adventure, and in one other vehicle which has not yet been announced.

Norma Shearer Has Four

Four Norma Shearer starring vehicles are scheduled for the coming season, although only one, "Ballyhoo," has been announced by title. "Ballyhoo" is an adaptation of the novel of carnival adventure by Beth Brown.

William Haines will appear in "Excess Baggage," a picturization of the current Broadway play, which James Cruze will direct, and in three other pictures to be announced later.

Lon Chaney, "the man of a thousand faces," will have the role of a police detective in "While the City Sleeps," a story of a big city's "Chinatown," and will be seen in three other photoplays during the new season.

Buster Keaton, who recently signed a long-term starring contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, will do "The Camera Man" and one other still unannounced picture for the new season. "The Camera Man" has as director Ed. Sedgwick, who made "West Point" and "Circus Rookies," and concerns the farcical adventures of a newsreel man in search of new thrills. Marceline Day has the feminine lead.

Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle, the co-starring combination, will appear in "The Baby Cyclone" and two other plays during the coming season. "The Baby Cyclone" is the film version of George M. Cohan's recent farce, which not long ago finished an engagement at the Henry Miller theatre, New York.

"Gold Braid," which will have a background of the United States Navy, will be one of Ramon Novarro's starring vehicles. This will present the Latin star in the role of an ensign. The other new Novarro picture is to be announced later.

Four comedy vehicles for the newly organized team of Karl Dane and George K. Arthur are announced for the new season, although the name of only one, "Camping Out," is given at this time.

Lillian Gish will appear in one Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer release for 1928-29. This is "The Wind," a picturization of Dorothy Scarborough's novel of the same name and tracing the dramatic effect of the Texas storm country on a girl from the East.

Three from Cosmopolitan

Cosmopolitan Productions, releasing its product through M-G-M, has announced three definite pictures for the new season, "Our Dancing Daughters," an original story by Josephine Lovett, has as director Harry Beaumont, and in the three chief feminine roles Joan Crawford, Dorothy Sebastian and Anita Page. "Breakers Ahead," the Cosmopolitan Magazine serial by Fannie Hurst, will also be produced. Another Cosmopolitan film will be the story tentatively titled "Mother and Sons," an original story for the screen.

Included in the list of pictures announced by M-G-M are "The Bellamy Trial," Monta Bell's screen version of the mystery story by Frances Noyes Hart. The cast selected for this film includes Leatrice Joy, Margaret Livingston, Betty Bronson, and Kenneth Thompson. Other photoplays are "The Wonder of Women," picturization of Hermann Sudermann's novel, "Stephen Trombolt's Wife," and "A Free Soul," cinema version of the story by Adela Rogers St. John, which was adapted to the stage under the same name by Willard Mack.

Tim McCoy, new Western star, will enact the central role in six pictures during the coming season, titles of which are to be announced later.

Short features to be produced during the coming season include six new films in the "Great Events" series, made by Technicolor process, 26 Ufa "Oddities," one-reel camera studies of the same type as those distributed so successfully last year, 10 Hal Roach "Our Gang" comedies, 10 Charley Chase comedy vehicles, 10 two-reel comedies with Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, 10 All-Star comedies, and 104 issues of the M-G-M News Reel.

Seven Short Subjects Groups for New M-G-M Season

SEVEN groups of short subjects are announced for the 1928-29 season by M-G-M, which, including 104 news reels will bring the season's output of shorts close to the 200 mark. This will be the second year the company has participated in this field and it will mark a continuance of the same program that has proven so successful during the current season.

Hal Roach will produce forty comedies as his contribution to the M-G-M short subject program. They will be divided into four groups of ten pictures each. Charley Chase will again star in one series; Our Gang will continue with a new group, as will Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy. The fourth series of ten will be the "All Star" series in which Max Davidson will be one of the featured players.

The Charley Chase series will be identical with those in which the star has appeared during the current season, while Our Gang will continue its merry way with its personnel of Joe Cobb, Farina, June Darling, Wheezer, Harry Spear and Spot, the dog, augmented with the presence of Mary Anne Jackson, diminutive star recently signed to a long term contract. Production will continue under the supervision of Robert Mc Gowan, vice-president of the Hal Roach studios.

Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy have been transferred from the All Star series, as they have proven during the past year that their personalities overshadow any descriptive title which might be applied to their comedies. They will continue next year in the type of comedies that have proven so popular.

Edna Marian and Viola Richard, Hal Roach comedy beauties, will appear again in support of various stars but several additional beauties will also be cast in similar roles.

The Ufa "Oddities," the one reel series of strange things and people from every part of the world, will again be present on the M-G-M schedule during 1928-29. Next year, however, the series will consist of twenty-six releases which will provide a regular release of one every other week, instead of the series of twenty-five which are now being released.

The Great Events Series will be continued in the new year along the same lines established at the present time. The series will consist of six releases of two reels each featuring great moments in the lives of great people of history. Again the series will be produced in Technicolor throughout with supervision of production under the personal attention of Dr. Herbert Kalmus. R. William Neill, responsible for the direction of most of the current series, is expected to continue his association with Dr. Kalmus.

That M-G-M News will be continued during the coming year, goes without saying.

Four New Stars for First Nat'l

Company Announces New Season's Production Schedule at Annual Meeting Held in Chicago

FROM out of the First National sales convention at the Drake Hotel in Chicago comes word of the company's productions for the 1928-29 season and also the announcement of four new stars—Corinne Griffith, Alice White, Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall.

A minimum of 54 productions will be made by the company for the season, including seventeen stage hits, nine important novels, a number of recent outstanding short stories and several original screen stories.

The season's product will be known as the "President Group." The productions will be sponsored by Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager for the past five years, who planned the group with Watterson R. Rothacker, managing director of the studio; Al Rockett, west coast production manager; John McCormick, producer of the Colleen Moore series; Sam E. Rork, who has produced many hits for First National release; E. M. Asher, Ned Marin, Henry Hobart and Charles R. Rogers.

Among the directors who will be responsible for the making of these productions are: George Fitzmaurice, Alfred Santell, Frank Lloyd, Charles Brabin, Richard Wallace, John Francis Dillon and Mervyn Le Roy.

Two late specials were announced by Mr. Rowland. They are, "The Good-bye Kiss" and "Toilers of the Sea." The former is a Mack Sennett production with the World War as a background. The leading role will be played by Sally Eilers, a newcomer to the screen. Matty Kemp is the hero of the story, while others in the cast are, Johnny Burke, Alma Bennett, Carmelita Geraghty, Wheeler Oakman and Lionel Belmore.

"Toilers of the Sea" is to be a Robert Kane production from the Victor Hugo novel and will be produced on a large scale.

Four for Colleen Moore

Colleen Moore will be seen in four pictures, all of them specials produced by John McCormick. Her first for the new year will be "Lilac Time," which Director George Fitzmaurice recently completed. It is based on Jane Cowl's great stage success. In the supporting cast are Gary Cooper, Eugenie Besserer, Burr McIntosh, Arthur Lake, Dan Mason, Emil Chautard, Lieut. Richard Grace and many others.

"Synthetic Sin" is another Colleen Moore special. It is from the Broadway play by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. "Baby Face," from the Cosmo Hamilton story and "The Richest Girl on Earth," written by John Emmett, will be other Colleen Moore specials.

The first Corinne Griffith picture, under her new contract, will be a special, now in work under the direction of Frank Lloyd. It is "The Divine Lady," from E. Barrington's novel. In the supporting cast are Victor Varconi, Ian Keith, Montagu Love, Marie Dressler, Dorothy Cummings, William Conklin and Julia Swayne Gordon. "Outcast," from the stage success by Hubert Henry Davies, will serve Miss Griffith as a starring vehicle.

Another vehicle for Miss Griffith will be "Saturday's Children," the play by Maxwell Anderson. Miss Griffith will be seen in two other pictures. "Paid For" is one of these; no present announcement of the other two can be divulged at this time.

Richard Barthelmess will be given a series of stories of outstanding dramatic worth. Not all of these can be announced at the present moment. One of them will be "Diversion," from the dramatic and tragic play by John Van Druten.

"Mutiny," a story of the seas, an original by W. Scott Darling, will be another Barthelmess vehicle.

Milton Sills is at work on a special for the new season, "The Barker," from Kenyon Nicholson's stage play. George Fitzmaurice is to direct it. A supporting cast including Dorothy Mackaill and Betty Compson is being assembled. There will be four other Milton Sills productions, "Captain of the Strong," "The Eagle's Trail," "The Spotter" and "Hard Rock."

Billie Dove will be presented in a special and in four star features. The special will be "La Tosca," from Victorien Sardou's drama. George Fitzmaurice will direct.

"The Other Tomorrow," from the new novel by Octavus Roy Cohen, will offer Miss Dove another dramatic role, that of a Southern belle in Georgia.

"The Heart of a Princess," by Maxine Alton, will afford Miss Dove the role of another Russian princess who escapes the revolution and becomes an actress in New York. "Pleasure Bound," is another story for Miss Dove. One other vehicle has been purchased for Miss Dove's use. It is from an internationally successful play.

Will Film Prize Story

Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall will be jointly starred in two productions. "Children of the Ritz," from Cornell Woolrich's novel which won the $10,000 prize in the First National-College Humor contest last year, will be a vehicle for both Miss Mackaill and Mr. Mulhall. "Waterfront," a play by Will Chappell and Gertrude Orr, has been bought for the joint stellar use of Miss Mackaill and Mr. Mulhall.

"Applesauce," from Barry Conner's successful stage comedy, will serve as a starring picture for Jack Mulhall alone.

"When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," will also star Mr. Mulhall alone. Gerald Duffy is writing the story, basing it upon Ernest Ball's ballad.

"Two Weeks Off," a play by Kenyon Nicholson, and Thomas Barrows, will star Miss Mackaill alone as a department store clerk. Miss Mackaill is to be starred alone in "The Girl in the Glass Cage" by George Kibbe Turner.

Alice White, who leaped from script girl to star in two years' time, will be seen in four pictures during the season.

"Show Girl," by J. P. McEvoy will be one of them. "On the Air," from the book of radio short stories by Paul Deresco Augsburg, will give Miss White an opportunity to reveal the more dramatic and emotional sides of her acting ability. The two other vehicles for Miss White are "Bluffers," a short story by Robert S. Carr, and an original screen story by Charles Beahan and Garrett Fort called "Rosie of the Ritz."

Four stories have been selected as vehicles for Charlie Murray.

Ralph Spence, has written an original vehicle for Murray's use. It is "The Lying Truth," in which Charlie will play the role of yokel who is tricked by a confidence man. Ian Hay Beith's stage success, "The Sport of Kings," has also been acquired for Murray's use. It is a race track comedy. "Wine, Women and Song," the musical comedy success, will be another Murray vehicle. Also "Charlie's Night Out," an original story.

First National has signed up for a new series of six Maynard pictures during the coming season. Their titles are: "The Glorious Trail," "The Phantom City," "The Royal Rider," "The Lawless Legion," "Cheyenne" and "Wells Fargo Express."

"The Whip," the English melodramatic story of the turf, is now being filmed under the direction of Charles Brabin. Sam E. Rork is production supervisor. Bernard McConville made the screen adaptation of the play by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton. Heading the cast are Dorothy Mackaill, Ralph Forbes, Anna Q. Nilsson and Lowell Sherman, with Marc McDermott, Albert Gran, Louis Payne and Arthur Clayton in other important parts.

A special will be made from the musical comedy "No, No Nanette," which at one time was being shown by five companies in this country, by another in London and in two or three other European countries.

It is said to be Mr. Reade's intention to continue operating the house as a Burlesque theatre for at least two years.

The acquisition of the Columbia gives Mr. Reade control of four first class theatres in Greater New York, the Astor, Bijou, Morosco and Columbia. Laemmle Announces "U" Lineup

Production Schedule for Next Season Calls for 68 Features, of Which 5 Will Be Super-Productions

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, has announced the full lineup of product that his company will place on the market for the 1928-29 season. It will be made up of 68 features divided into so-called long-run supers, Laemmle Specials, Universal-Jewel productions and Western and Action features. There will also be a long line of short subjects, including one and two-reel comedies, serials, Western featurettes, the International Newsreel and two new series of the Collegian two-reelers.

Universal will introduce two new innovations. No pictures are to be held out as road-shows. Instead, the so-called big supers will be released immediately as long-run pictures, with regular motion picture houses getting the break of their pulling power for extended engagements.

The second innovation is the creation of a new brand of releases to be known as the Laemmle Specials. These will be just slightly short of super-production merit. They will be handled individually and in many cases as extended run product.

The five Universal long-run super-productions will be "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Man Who Laughs," "Show Boat," "Broadway" and "The Mating Call." "Uncle Tom's Cabin" recently completed a six-months' run at the Central Theatre in New York. It was directed by Harry Pollard, and adapted from the Harriet Beecher Stowe famous story.

"The Man Who Laughs," directed by Paul Leni, with Conrad Veidt and Mary Philbin in the leading roles, only recently opened at the Central Theatre in New York.

Carl Laemmle bought the screen rights to Edna Ferber's book, "The Show Boat," which since has been produced as a musical play by Florenz Ziegfeld. It will be given a big production by Universal under the direction of Harry Pollard. "Broadway" was another tremendous Broadway stage success. It will be made into an elaborate production with all the glitter, drama and tragedy of night life along the Great White Way.

"The Mating Call" is a Rex Beach story, which appeared as a serial in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and it has just been brought out in book form by Harper Brothers. It will be made in a big way by Universal.

Eleven Laemmle Specials

The new brand of Laemmle Specials will include seven miscellaneous pictures and four Reginald Denny Productions. The lead-off picture will be "The Last Warning," another stage mystery play. It was written as a play by Thomas F. Fallon from the Wadsworth Camp novel, "The House of Fear." It will have the same director and star as "The Cat and the Canary," Paul Leni, and Laura La Plante.

"The Cohens and Kellys in Atlantic City," will be another Laemmle Special. It will be the third of the Cohens and Kellys. Much of it will be shot at the noted beach.

"The Michigan Kid," the next Laemmle Special, was made from the Rex Beach story of that name, with Renee Adoree and Conrad Nagel in the leading roles. Irvin Willat directed it.

"The Foreign Legion," a French-African drama, was taken from "The Red Mirage," by I. A. R. Wylie, and directed by Edward Sloman, with Norman Kerry and Lewis Stone co-starred, supported by Mary Nolan and June Marlowe.

"Give and Take," from the Aaron Hoffman stage success, was made by William Beaudine with George Sidney and Jean Hersholt in the featured roles.

"The Girl on the Barge," to be made by Edward Sloman, with Mary Philbin in the lead, is being adapted from the story by Rupert Hughes. It is a story of the Erie Canal and a flower-like girl whose home is a cabin on one of the canal boats.

"Lonesome" has just been completed by Dr. Paul Fejos, who made "The Last Moment." Mann Page wrote the story, and Edward T. Lowe, Jr., adapted it. Glenn Tryon and Barbara Kent are in the leading roles.

Reginald Denny's four pictures for next year will be "The Night Bird," "Partners for the Night," "Red Hot Speed" and "His Lucky Day." He will start work on the first, "Red Hot Speed," May 15th under the direction of Fred Newmeyer.

The Jewel Line-up

The Universal-Jewel line-up includes four Laura La Plante pictures, four Glenn Tryon pictures, one starring Conrad Veidt, eight Hoot Gibson pictures, and thirteen with other stars or all-star casts.

The four Laura La Plante vehicles will be "Home, James," from a story by Gladys E. Johnson, directed by William Beaudine, with Charles Delaney and others in the cast; "One Rainy Night," directed by Hess; "That Blonde" and "Dangerous Dimples."

The four Glenn Tryon pictures will be "Fresh Every Hour," directed by William Craft, with Marian Nixon in the leading feminine role; "The Gate Crasher," which goes into production May 15th under Craft's direction; "The Kid's Clever," and "The Life of the Party."

Conrad Veidt, who is starred in "The Man Who Laughs," will be starred in a Jewel release entitled "The Charlatan," from the Broadway stage success by Ernest Pascal and Leonard Praskins.

The miscellaneous Jewels will be: "Jazz Mad," directed by Harmon Weight, from a Svend Gade story, with Jean Hersholt, Marian Nixon and George Lewis featured; "The Grip of the Yukon," directed by Ernst Laemmle, from a story by Charles A. Logue, with Francis X. Bushman, Neil Hamilton and June Marlowe featured; "Silks and Saddles," directed by Robert "Thoroughbreds," with Marian Nixon featured; "Red Lips," directed by Melville Brown, with Marion Nixon and Charles Rogers starred; "The Freedom of the Press," directed by George Melford, from a Peter B. Rath, and "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" directed by William Wyler, from a story by Leigh Jason, with Tom Moore and Bessie Love featured.

Eight for Hoot Gibson

The Hoot Gibson productions, eight in number, will be "The Danger Rider," directed by Henry MacRea, from a story by Arthur Statter, with Eugenia Gilbert in support; "Points West," from a story by B. M. Bower; "Burning Winds," with Virginia Browne Faire in support; "Clearing the Trail," "Smilin' Guns," "Blow for Blow," "The Gateway" and "King of the Rodeo."

Universal's action features will include a group of seven pictures starring Ted Wells, six starring Jack Perrin and Rex, the equine star, two starring Al Wilson, stunt aviator, and seven melodramas. The Ted Wells features, in some of which he will be supported by Miss Vonceil Viking, plucky young horsewoman who rode her horse from New York City to Los Angeles last winter, will be entitled "The Crimson Canyon," "Beauty and Bullets," "Born to the Saddle," "Grit Wins," "The Ridin' Demon," "The Smilin' Terror" and "The Border Wildcat."

"U" Adds Six Midland K. C. Houses to Chain

THE Midland circuit of theatres has transferred six theatres in the suburbs of Kansas City to the Universal chain. Universal now operates seven suburban houses including the new Uptown in Kansas City. The suburban houses acquired by Universal are the Isis, Linwood, Apollo, Lincoln, Gillham and Gladstone. Midland now operates about 50 theatres in Kansas, Missouri and Iowa.

Road Shows Top Warner Product

Extended Run Productions and Features Are Announced at New York Convention

WARNER BROS., through the president, Harry M. Warner, have announced its production schedule for the 1928-29 season, which will reduce in numbers the productions made during past season, but which, at the same time, will increase production expenditures.

In addition to a group of road shows and extended run productions, there will be eighteen regular Warner feature pictures. These productions will be based on the works of well-known authors, and the Vitaphone will be used extensively in the synchronization of sight and sound. Many sound effects will be employed as part of every road show attraction and Vitaphone musical accompaniments will be available on each of the eighteen features.

The road show group will be headed by "Noah's Ark," which has been in production for a long time on the Coast under the direction of Michael Curtis. Dolores Costello is playing the star role, and is being supported by George O'Brien in the leading male role, Noah Beery, Myrna Loy, Paul McAllister, Leila Hyams, Helene Costello, Audrey Ferris, Louise Fazenda, John Miljan, Anders Randolf, William V. Mong and Armand Kaliz. The story of "Noah's Ark" is by Darryl Francis Zanuck(and was adapted by Anthony Coldeway.

Al Jolson will again be seen in a road show attraction in which the Vitaphone will figure prominently. The picture is based on Leslie S. Barrow's play, "The Singing Fool," which C. Graham Baker is adapting to the screen. The starting date will be early in June.

The first week in June another road show will go into production. This picture will star Fannie Brice. It will mark the screen debut of an actress who is known throughout the whole amusement world. She was an international success with Ziegfeld in musical comedy, with Belasco on the dramatic stage, and in big-time vaudeville. The untitled story for Miss Brice is being written by Robert Lord.

Three more features for 1928-29 that incorporate Vitaphone sound in song and dialogue are already completed. The first of these extended run productions is "Tenderloin," starring Dolores Costello and featuring Conrad Nagel, which has just terminated a successful run on Broadway at the Warner Theatre. The story, by Melville Crosman, was directed by Michael Curtiz, with a supporting cast including Mitchell Lewis, Dan Wolheim and Georgie Stone.

Another of the trio is "Glorious Betsy," now playing at the Warner Theatre. Again Dolores Costello is heard on the Vitaphone as the star with Conrad Nagel. In this vehicle she is directed by Alan Crosland, and supported by Pasquale Amato, Marc McDermott, Betty Blythe, Paul Panzer, Andre de Segurcola, Clarissa Selwyn, Michael Vavitch and John Miljan. The story is taken from the play by Rida Johnson Young, and was scenarized by Anthony Coldeway.

The third Vitaphone special already finished is a film version of Charles Klein's play, "The Lion and the Mouse," with May McAvoy, Lionel Barrymore and William Collier, Jr. Alec Francis, Jack Ackroyd and Emmet Corrigan are also in the cast. Lloyd Bacon directed from a script by Robert Lord.

In addition to the six foregoing road shows and extended run productions, several more stories will be selected for this group on the Warner Bros. program.

A reduction in the number of winners does not mean a reduction in the production budget. On the contrary, Warner Bros. have allotted more money to be sent for the eighteen than they have previously invested in the feature group when it called for twenty-six pictures.

With or Without Vitaphone

The Vitaphone accompaniments which will be a part of each Warner feature will be played by symphony orchestras. As in the past, however, these pictures will be available with or without the Vitaphone scores, according to the individual needs of each house.

A large portion of the features are already in the processes of production. Several are entirely finished, others are being titled and edited, still others are before the cameras and the remaining stories are being adapted.

Warner Bros have lined up an array of names on the list of directors in whose hands will be entrusted their program for next season.

Among them are Michael Curtiz, Lloyd Bacon, now at work on "Women They Talk About," with Irene Rich; Archie L. Mayo, at present completing "State Street Sadie," with Myrna Loy, for the new program and is to receive another assignment shortly; Roy Del Ruth, whose next will be a comedy drama, temporarily titled "No Questions Asked," featuring Audrey Ferris and William Collier, Jr.; Howard Bretherton, whose present picture now under way, is an untitled co-starring vehicle for May McAvoy and Conrtad Nagel, and Ray Enright, whose first work on the 1928-29 schedule will be "The Land of the Silver Fox," starring Rin-Tin-Tin.

The Warner Bros. sales force, which gathered at the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York from all parts of the country last week, returned home Sunday night after a three days' convention, at which they heard official announcements of stars, pictures and policies for the coming year.

Branch managers, division managers, sales managers and special representatives of Warner Bros, as well as the Vitaphone Corporation's field force, participated.

Sam E. Morris, general manager of distribution for the company, presided at the sessions, at which the Vitaphone was explained completely by George Quigley, vice-president of the Vitaphone Corporation. Home office executives who attended included Harry M. Warner, Albert Howson, scenario editor; A. P. Waxman, director of advertising and publicity; Joseph Hummel, manager of the contract department; H. M. Doherty, auditor of exchanges; C. C. Ryan, purchasing agent; A. C. Brauninger, sales promotion head; Samuel Carlisle, comptroller, and Paul Swift, sales manager of Vitaphone.

Committee Testing New Incandescent Lights

THE new incandescent lights, now the object of experiments, will lead eventually to the elimination of the old type from motion picture studios, it is thought by Frank Murphy, head of the Warner Bros. electrical engineering staff and in direct charge of Vitaphone electrical work. He is also chairman of the committee, which is composed of representatives from the electrical departments and laboratories of all the other large producing companies. Among its members are Victor Lilner, Joe Bubray, Arthur Edeson, Ed De Par, Tony Gaudio, Hal Mohr, Frank Good and Ned Van Buren, representing the American Society of Cinematographers.

For the past few weeks tests and demonstrations concerning the merits of the new incandescent lights have been in progress, with an average attendance of 200 camera men and technical experts at each demonstration.

Electrical engineering scientists from the East have come to Hollywood to collaborate in the tests, including Dr. M. Luckiesh and I. H. Van Horn, of Cleveland; L. C. Porter, Harrison, N. J., and R. E. Farnham, New York City.

W. I. Nolan Mentioned as Successor to Al Steffes

W. I. Nolan, lieutenant governor of Minnesota, is being prominently mentioned as a successor to Al Steffes, president of Northwest Theatre Owners. W. W. Miller, of Cloquet, Minn., indicated this week that he would nominate Lieutenant Governor Nolan for the position when the organization convenes at the Nicollet hotel in Minneapolis next week. Mr. Steffes will also be a candidate for the position. Mr. Nolan receives $1,000 a year salary as lieutenant governor, but if elected head of the theatre owners, he would receive a reputed $40,000.

M. P. T. O. A. Moved to New Headquarters

The New York headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were moved from 745 Seventh Avenue to 1650 Broadway, Suite 808, on Monday, April 30th, 1928.

These offices were formerly occupied by Arthur Hammerstein and provide the national organization with more spacious headquarters. The telephone numbers, Circle 4037 and 4038 will remain the same.

Woodhull Commends Stand of Houses Banning Showing of "Dawn"

R. F. WOODHULL, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has issued a statement regarding the picture "Dawn" in which he advises exhibitors to give careful thought to the showing of this or similar pictures that might retard the worldwide movement toward cordial relations among all countries.

In part the Woodhull statement says:

"It would be deplorable if the display of a picture or any other gesture for a few paltry dollars would place the slightest stumbling block in the way of the fine progress that is being made. In congratulating the management of the Publix, Universal and Loew theatres upon the decision not to exhibit the war picture, 'Dawn,' I sincerely hope that all theatre managers will give careful thought to the matter before rushing into this or any other endeavor that might tend to retard the worldwide movement for more cordial relations and better understandings."

British Theatre Companies Increase Activities

The Denman trust or the Denman Picture House, Limited, a new public company with a capital of £1,000,000 registered to acquire theatres, film producing studios and other property, is steadily increasing its control of theatres, state advices to the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. The General Theatres Corporation, Ltd., controlled by the Szarcasy-Gibbons group, made a public issue for capital in the amount of £3,500,000. This amount is divided in 2,250,000 6½ per cent first mortgage debenture stock at 95 per cent, and 1,250,000 7½ per cent cumulative preference shares of £1 each at par. This company has been formed to acquire control of approximately 56 cinemas and variety theatres throughout the British Isles.

JERSEY CITY BOASTS ONE OF AMERICA'S GREAT THEATRES

New Stanley, Beautiful Expression of Atmospheric Playhouse, Seats 5000 Persons

CALLED by its sponsors "one of America's great theatres," the Stanley theatre in Jersey City, N. J., was opened to the public on Friday, March 23, and impressed its first night audience as it has the patronage of its first-time visitors since then—that this magnificent atmospheric auditorium with its accessory rooms, foyers and promenades, is really deserving of the qualifying line which appears under its name in the advertising and publicity.

The Stanley has a seating capacity of 5,000 persons and achieves a brilliant note in the splendors of its interior. Its appointment and the technical equipment included in its design—the very latest achieved by the combined arts and sciences of architects and engineers—place it among the most commodious and beautiful public resorts this country has to offer the patrons of its motion picture presentations.

The design is the work of F. W. Wentworth and his associate, F. J. Vreeland, architects who have designed other theatres operated by the Stanley-Fabian company, the builders and operators of this new Stanley theatre.

On the right is a view of the stage and proscenium arch, conforming to the atmosphere of the Italian courtyard setting of the Stanley auditorium.

The auditorium, representing an Italian courtyard, is of the outdoor type which characterizes the atmospheric theatre. The building is of fireproof construction.

Besides the auditorium and balcony with their 5,000 seats, it has 35 rooms, 16 passageways and corridors, 19 stairways, 16 toilet rooms and the lobbies, lounges, telephone alcoves and projection room, numerous vestibules and the eleven buildings used in the reproduction of the Italian courtyard.

Entering the luxurious lobby, done in Italian Renaissance architecture, the patron faces the wide grand stairway leading to the balcony and the mezzanine lounges. On each side of these stairs the entrances to the main auditorium afford quick access to seats. The balcony is a clear span 125 feet wide above the auditorium or orchestra seats.

Above the balcony is stretched a tropical awning typical of Southern Italy, with just another touch of the famed Mediterranean blue sky showing at its edges.

A NEW SPANISH ATMOSPHERIC THEATRE IN CLEVELAND

The Granada, Operated by Loew's, Has Seating Capacity of 2,500

General view of the Granada Theatre auditorium, featuring an adaptation of Spanish architecture done in the atmospheric style. Preston G. Bradshaw, architect.

THE popular Spanish style of architecture, with all the charm of the Old World was utilized in the building of the Granada theatre, Detroit and West 117th St., Cleveland, the newest 2,500-seat theatre built by Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., and the twelfth in the chain. Preston G. Bradshaw, architect, designed the Granada.

The threshold of the lobby is the dividing line between new America and old Spain, for the lobby is a true Spanish patio or courtyard, with columns supporting massive arches, wrought iron railings and wrought iron lanterns. Rich brocaded shawls and tapestries hang from the railings, giving the warmth of color against the stucco background.

Adjacent to the patio are the rest rooms; smoke rooms for the men; powder rooms for the ladies, with a series of small dressing tables and mirrors.

The auditorium is of the intimate type, that is, much wider than it is long. In addition to being cozy, this arrangement makes it possible for everyone in the house to see and hear equally well. The auditorium decorations carry out the patio idea. The outdoor effect is gained by the use of mural decorations and vine-hung walls extending from the rear of the house down to the stage. Overhead is a blue sky, with sparkling stars as nearly like the skies of Spain as modern electricians and technical experts can make them.

The proscenium is continued in a typical Spanish style, being ornate in a manner that expresses the spirit of the building. At the right of the proscenium is a giant wood screen of Moorish designs which conceals the organ. On either side of this screen statues in niches make interesting details. On the right side of the proscenium is a richly lighted arch, overhung with vines and lit by hanging lanterns.

The exterior of the Granada anticipates its atmospheric interior. Red tiled cornices attract instant attention and draw the eye upward to the old Spanish mission style tower topped by its fascinating cupola. This tower contains an old Spanish bell imported from the mountain town of Andrezzi where it formerly served to call the worshippers to church.

On the left is shown a portion of the main lobby with balcony connecting the mezzanine lounge. The atmospheric effect is used in the lobby, auditorium of the playhouse as well as the auditorium.

CHINESE DESIGN IN ATMOSPHERIC STYLE OF THEATRE

A RATHER novel adaptation of the "atmospheric" or out-door type of motion picture auditorium is accomplished in the Lindy theatre, located at 69th street and Elmwood avenue in Philadelphia. The decoration is in the Chinese style, with dragons, birds and butterflies painted on the lower reaches of the domed ceiling, and pagodas and lanterns employed as decorative effects over the organ grilles and side exit doors.

The Lindy was designed by W. H. Lee, architect of Philadelphia. Equity Theatres, Inc., own and operate the Lindy, which is the newest in a chain of over fifty theatres in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Reading, Bridgeton, New Jersey, and Willow Grove.

The exterior is of terra cotta. A model of the Spirit of St. Louis, Lindbergh's famed plane, is mounted over the marquee, as a symbol of the theatre's name.

Theatre Building Business Map

Above Average Business	AA	Very light new construction
		Light new construction
Average Business	A	Moderately heavy construction
Under Average Business	UA	Heavy new construction

The map of the United States shown here is divided into seven territories, with colored shading indicating the division of new proposed theatre building as represented for the period from March 15th to April 15th. This new construction is represented in valuation of dollars and cents rather than number of projects.

The shading is in four densities; solid, which represents the greatest value of proposed theatres; heavy stipple, which is second in valuation of new construction; medium, which areas represent conservative building; and the very light areas, where the investment in new theatre projects is very light. The information used in compiling the statistics visualized by the map was obtained through several reliable sources, and the map is to be considered as very nearly accurate in representing comparative theatre building activities in various sections of the country.

The circles shown on the map are located in key cities and illustrate averages of theatre attendance during the three months' period from March 15th to April 15th. The diagrams indicate the relative attendance at the better theatres in these cities during the period covered. These are given by "averages," with symbols to indicate "Above Average" and "Under Average" box office returns. The term "average" as applied in this survey indicates satisfactory box office returns, based upon theatre expectancies, which, in turn, are governed by past earnings under similar or nearly similar conditions.

These attendance statistics were compiled from an analysis of the Key City Reports, published weekly in Motion Picture News, and other sources of information gathered by this publication.

THIS report on new theatre projects covers the period of thirty days from March 15th to April 15th and indicates a slowing up in theatre construction, especially as far as total amount of investment is concerned.

While the number of projects announced to be built during this period is not a great deal less than shown in the thirty days analyzed in our last report, the dollar value is approximately only one-half. The figures for the March-April building are as follows:

Forty-two new projects wil call for a seating capacity of 54,040 and an investment of $10,338,000. The average cost of each theatre figures out to be $246,150, and the seating capacity 1,287. The cost per seat is $191.00.

Only two theatre projects announced are to cost over a million dollars, while four will range betwen $500,000 and a million dollars.

Comparing these figures with our February-March report indicates the seating capacity of the average theatre is approximately only 100 less but the average cost per seat is down about 27 per cent.

This analysis shows a condition which may indicate a change in the type of theatre being built, that is, from the large palatial show places to the smaller and more conomically constructed neighborhood and small town theatre.

Providing figures in our future reports continue to show the condition as existing in this report, it may be considered that a new era in theatre construction has been ushered in where smaller theatres requiring more modest investments will be built in great numbers and big theatres of the large centers only at rare intervals. The Statistical Department of Motion Picture News has felt that a change in theatre building along these lines was about due though it was beyond our powers of analysis to predict the exact period wherein this change would take place.

ACTUALLY the change in building from the elaborate theatre to the good smaller house need bring with it no decline in business as far as the selling of equipment in this field goes. A theatre that seats 1200 and calls for an investment of approximately $250,000 has practically the same requirements for most types of equipment as has the more elaborate theatres. The difference in investment between a million dollar house and a $250,000 house lies mainly with building materials and refinements rather than with the primary requisites of a motion picture theatre.

Our analysis shows that the Middle States lead in the amount of investment required for this thirty-day report. In this territory 17 theatres will require $3,640,000 and will have a seating capacity of 20,050. Furthermore, one theatre costing a million dollars and two between one-half and one million will be built. These figures show that in this section of the country the average house will cost $214,100, with a seating capacity of 1,180 and a cost per seat of $181.50.

The territory which falls next in line is the South Eastern where three large theatres are announced. These three theatres will cost $2,110,000 and will seat 6,240, giving the averages of $703,300 per theatre, 2,080 seats and $338.00 the cost per seat.

In the North Atlantic States, eleven theatres will cost $2,025,000 with a total seating capacity of 13,250. In this territory it is found that the average theatre will cost $184,100, having a seating capacity of 1,205 and the average cost per seat $153.00.

In the South Western territory, five new projects will cost $978,000 and will seat 6,850. One of these projects will call for an investment of over $500,000. The average cost of each theatre in this territory is $195,600 and will have 1,370 seats giving an average cost per seat of $143.00.

The West Coast territory falls next in line where four projects, one of which will cost over a million dollars, calls for a total investment of $935,000 and will seat 4,250. The averages for this territory are $233,700 per theatre with a seating capacity of 1,100 and a cost per seat of $220.00.

Only one new theatre project was reported for the Western States. This project will cost $350,000 and will seat 1,400, giving the cost per seat of $250.00.

Likewise in New England. Only one new theatre is announced, where $300,000 will be invested in a 2,000 seat house. The average cost per seat in this theatre will be $150.00.

THEATRE attendance failed to come up to expectations for the period we are covering in the current map. After a Lenten season which on the whole was not so bad, and earlier indications that the picture houses might expect a rather flourishing Spring business, the actual results disappointed.

A factor which asserts itself as perhaps the greatest single deterrent to theatregoing on the scale expected during the post-lent days is the weather. The vagaries of the weather, as a matter of fact, have been cited as one of the leading causes for the below-normal business in all lines of commercial activity.

The key cities which show a downward move on the current map as compared with the April report, are Los Angeles, which dipped from an Average last month to Under Average this month; Chicago from Average to Under Average; Dallas from Average to Under Average, and Seattle from Average to Under Average. Boston and Salt Lake City, which on last month's map were at Above Average rating, this month are at Average.

Upward changes are recorded by Des Moines and Baltimore, from Under Average to Average; and Indianapolis from Average to Above Average. New York City, Atlanta, Cleveland, Kansas City, Buffalo, Minneapolis, Central Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Albany, Tampa, Milwaukee, San Francisco and Cincinnati, are static at Average ratings.

The decline from expectancy in theatre attendance over the country during this period, while tracing to conditions which include purely temporary seasonal disturbances, such as bad weather and in several towns to such influences as the appropriation of the bulk of the patronage by a new theatre, which naturally greatly decreases the draw at the older established houses, nevertheless follows the trend of general business. For business in most lines for the first quarter of 1928 has shown declines below the figures for the corresponding period of 1927, according to reports of earnings and sales by various companies. The reports by a large number of concerns in various lines of commercial activity showed a predominence of declines from last year's earnings, though several special lines showed increases in both sales and earnings—among them the chain stores which showed a gain of 13.1. As far as unemployment is concerned, there is less heard about that now, and for the reason, largely, that the latest figures show a gain in employment.

The majority of the pictures which scored as leading box office attractions during the period are those same films which in last month's report were the leaders—which may be one of the contributing causes of the decline from expectancy, for evidently the newest crop of releases is lacking in the strong attraction qualities which marked the film supply offered the exhibitors during the two previous months. Aside from "Speedy" and "The Patsy," there are no pictures in the current "best ten" group which have not figured in the previous month's list.

THE Harold Lloyd comedy "Speedy" is far and away the prize attraction for the past month at the key city theatres. These reports show that "Speedy" is credited with excellent business at the box office of 10 theatres—including a number of new high house records—a highly satisfactory showing at one house, and with a mark against it at one theatre. This single disappointment, so far credited, seems remarkable on the surface of things, and investigation of the conditions which surrounded the presentation shows that unusual factors were present. "Speedy" disappointed at the Des Moines theatre in Des Moines—it did business, but it went below the mark for Lloyd's pictures in that town. Previous to the "Speedy" opening and during its run, this theatre had been conducting a vigorous campaign for the Vitaphone presentation of "The Jazz Singer," with newspaper publicity and poster billing coupled in a concentrated drive to sell the sound device in connection with Al Jolson's screen debut. The campaign had its effects and built up an interest in Vitaphone which transcended any current attractions the Des Moines had to offer its patrons. The facts are worth mentioning, because they prove again that the picture with potential drawing power cannot produce the results of which it is capable, in a limited run, without the proper exploitation.

The second picture on the list is "Red Hair," which also was one of last month's leaders. The Clara Bow vehicle scored in several of the key city houses. The other eight leaders were "The Jazz Singer," "The Circus," "The Gaucho," "The Legion of the Condemned," "The Big City," "The Patsy," "The Patent Leather Kid," and 'Wild Geese." A prominent place was earned by "The Last Command," and "Ramona."

Among the month's pictures which received strong advertising backing and apparently figured importantly at the box offices was $40,000 Miles with Lindbergh," a three-reeler offered by M-G-M. It is unusual for the short subject to receive such hearty backing in the exploitation and the results were entirely satisfactory in this case.

Aside from these pictures, no outstanding accomplishments were performed at the key city theatres by the general current releases. The Road show attractions which continue to play to good crowds are "Wings," "The King of Kings," "Sunrise" and "Simba" on general tour and in New York "The Trail of 98," "Street Angel," "Four Sons," "The Man Who Laughs" and "Glorious Betsy."

The key city theatres which have been forced to just travel along and await the turn of the tide flowing to brand new houses of the most elaborate style are located in Minneapolis, where the new Publix Minnesota drew enormous crowds for four solid weeks, and Seattle, where another new Publix theatre held the center of the stage for three weeks, before there were signs of a return to normalcy. While curiosity to see every feature, architectural and amusement, of the new houses prevails, there is little public reaction to shows alone, and, as a result, the other theatres in those towns had to take things as they came. Unless the older houses are greatly ante-dated by the new establishment, matters generally settle back into the usual stride, which happened in both of these cities.

An Exhibitor-Made Press Book Is Making Good

WHEN Harold Lloyd offered cash prizes for exhibitor ideas to compile into a press book for his new comedy "Speedy" and thereby stood sponsor of a campaign outline "by" as well as "for" the exhibitors, he tried an experiment of more than passing interest to those in the distribution and exhibition end of the industry.

For as many years as it has been in existence, the press book has been the object of conflicting opinions on the part of the exhibitors. Questionnaires sent out by this publication to a large list of exhibitors brought back returns which showed divided opinion as to the value of the average press book as a practical manual for use in exploiting the pictures of the distributors issuing the books.

Consequently, the Lloyd company's experiment, to have exhibitors themselves write the "Speedy" campaign, suggest the kind of advance advertising the style of exploitation stunts, the type of merchant tieups, the lobby displays and the newspaper layout, paved the way for a demonstration, which even if it is unproductive of conclusive evidence that a similar idea should be applied to all press books, at least is an honest effort in the right direction—that of giving exhibitors an exploitation campaign outline devised by exhibitors and the publicity men actually on the job at the theatres.

The result of the prize competition is a press book which goes over the ground as thoroughly as any book the distributors ever have compiled for the showmen. The ideas of about 45 exhibitors, writing from their experience and knowledge of exploitation at their own theatres, are published in the "Speedy" press book.

The list of contributors includes the names of the most widely known exhibitors in the business—men whose actual performance and accomplishments have won them more than local reputation as keen judges of public taste and endowed with unusual ability in devising clever advertising and exploitation in connection with motion picture presentations.

Among these are H. E. Jameyson, Miller theatre, Wichita; C. Harrison, Palace, Cincinnati; Clark Munson, Virginia theatre, Champaign; Joe Meyer, Palace, Hamilton, O.; Oscar Doob, Kunsky theatres, Detroit; H. F. Storin, Leroy theatre, Pawtucket; M. A. Malaney, Loews theatres, Cleveland; Russell Moon, Paramount theatre, New York; G. J. RuLon, Rialto, Mechanicsville, La.; Wallace R. Allen, Penn theatre, Pittsburgh; S. L. Stokes, R and R theatres, Kingsville, Texas; James Fotheringham, Wellmont theatre, Montclair, N. J.

THOSE are names familiar to readers of the trade journals through the frequent publication of campaigns they have staged for pictures of all types. Many of them are originators of ideas which have become almost standard exploitation stunts. Another important feature is that the small towns as well as the large cities, the de luxe type of house and the community theatre are represented in the background for the various exploitation campaigns written for "Speedy."

And that is the point of greatest con-

A refreshing spring evening in an Italian courtyard. This is the perfect illusion in the new Stanley Theater. Supplementing and perfecting this impression, so ably produced by the architect, is Manufactured Weather,* provided only through the air conditioning designs and equipment as produced by Carrier Engineers.

One of the most unusual features of this magnificent new theater is the very unique installation of the air diffuser outlets, so skillfully placed that not one is visible to mar the perfect atmospheric effect. The placing of these outlets, always presenting a serious problem in an atmospheric theater, is an exclusive Carrier accomplishment, further evidenced in the constant gentle, draughtless, downward diffusion of air throughout the entire theater at all times.

As specialists in air conditioning, Carrier Engineers are proud to have contributed this health-giving comfort to the Stanley, and to a rapidly growing list of theaters throughout the country, where the exceptional results of Manufactured Weather* are being demonstrated day in and day out.

The intimate cooperation of Carrier Engineers with the Architect, the Owner and the Builder, and the acceptance of complete responsibility for results has meant the unqualified success of every Carrier System.

The same system, including the safe, simple, compact Carrier Centrifugal Refrigeration System, is now available for the fine small theaters. Write for the book, "Theater Cooling and Conditioning." Ask for a visit from one of our engineers.

New Avalon of the National Theater Corporation, Chicago, equipped with C-H Dimmers. John Eberson, architect. Switchboard (shown below) by The Major Equipment Co.

Architectural Beauty completed with C-H Dimmers in the New Avalon, Chicago

No longer do progressive theater owners invest fortunes in decorative art and risk losing part of its effectiveness through haphazard lighting.

The New Avalon, Chicago, is but one of the new theaters in which C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers enhance and bring out the architectural beauty. For the designer's art can go only so far. Light must do the rest. And successful showmen have discovered that C-H Dimmers complete the beauty of their theaters and help make each presentation better.

Because of the results others have achieved, you too, should know all about C-H Dimmers. Ask your architect or electrician how easily any house can be improved—and write for the booklet "Illumination Control for the Modern Theater".

Why C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers are chosen

Dimming, smooth as night-fall, from full brilliancy to black out—freedom from burn-outs and maintenance—adaptability to all theaters; regardless of size or decorative scheme—design which makes future remodelling easy—these are a few outstanding features of C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers which make them first choice with leading theater owners, architects and electricians.

SUPREME

The Only System of Its Kind that Actually WASHES the Air

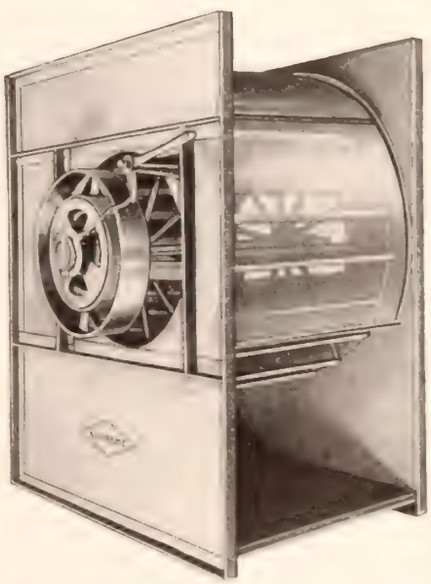
Does It Cool? It Does!

And How? QUIETLY!

Gives same results as the big expensive cooling systems used in big-city theatres. Yet its cost is moderate.

The Air-Washing Unit



The Supreme Turbo Air-Washing Unit, a wonderful new feature of the Supreme System, creates a foggy water-mist through which the air must pass before entering the cooling blower. It's amazing how that mist freshens and cools the air.

The Supreme Cooling Blower

After the air has been washed and cooled by the Air-Washing Unit, this 6 ft. all steel cooling blower forces it into your theatre at such speed and in such volume that all the air is changed 30 to 60 times an hour. No noise! No drafts! Just a continual inpouring of fresh, cooling breezes.

Equipped with Horton Variable Speed Pulley

At slight extra cost the Supreme Blower can be furnished with the famous Horton Variable Speed Pulley, instead of standard single speed pulley.

tention in the charges which exhibitors have brought against press books in general. The complaint—we are speaking of the average, not the special press book or the productions of one or two particular specialists—the general complaint, then, is that the press books do not provide sufficient material prepared from the standpoint of the small town theatre operator, or the operator of a small theatre in a large town. Provision against this fault would seem to be made in adequate fashion by the compliers of the "Speedy" book.

WE are still too close to release date on "Speedy" to reduce to figures the results produced by the book in furnishing exact material used by the exhibitors in their campaigns. What percentage deviated from the plans presented in the book and devised their own drives on original lines, and what percentage relied solely upon the book plans, is something that cannot now be arrived at—there are too many exhibitors still to be heard from and too many others who have not yet played "Speedy."

But a rough idea can be given by the following:

Out of a total of 21 reviews of campaigns actually staged for "Speedy" at as many theatres scattered over the country, 16 drives used ideas specifically outlined in the press book, and 5 were based on ideas not suggested in the press book.

A few of the exhibitors whose suggested campaigns are included in the "Speedy" book are represented in the total of 21. It is natural to expect that an exhibitor who outlines a campaign in a prize competition would make use of the ideas when he came to actually exploiting the picture.

H. E. Jameyson, who handles publicity and advertising for the Miller theatre, Wichita, Kan., utilized most of the press book suggestions for his engagement. Incidently, Jameyson was first prize winner of the Harold Lloyd Exploitation Contest and automatically he confined his activities to the host of suggestions he submitted to the Lloyd office. His lobby display was striking. He also arranged for a double spread in the Town Crier, which is the Sunday roto section of the Wichita Beacon. Jameyson also used the taxi cab covers and the teaser and advertising copy suggested in the press book.

Carlos Harrison of the Palace theatre, Cincinnati, also followed out the press book suggestions.

The most elaborate campaigns to date are those which were put on for the New York run of "Speedy" at the Rivoli theatre, and in Los Angeles.

THE Rivoli theatre's entire front was covered with what is one of the largest cloth banners ever displayed on Broadway. The name of Harold Lloyd is all that appears on it—yellow letters across a blue background. Leslie Whelan, in charge of exploitation for the Lloyd Corporation, arranged a tieup with the Horton Ice Cream Company in conjunction with the Rivoli showing. The Horton Company's huge painted sign at Seventh Avenue and 42nd Street was turned over to the Rivoli for the length of the engagement. Lloyd's head formed the feature center display on the sign on which the following text also appeared: "'Speedy' at the Rivoli now serves Horton's Ice Cream." Tieups were also made with all stores handling the "Speedy" book and the music stores handling "Speedy Boy," the official theme song of the picture. An attractive prologue was used in presenting the picture.

Gentlemen:-

I just want to say a word of appreciation on the ORCHESTRAPHONE.

In all my fifteen years' experience in the operation of theatres, I have never seen anything that was the stimulant to theatre business - that the ORCHESTRAPHONE has been in the Empire Theatre.

This instrument places any type music at your disposal, and with the cueing arrangement you have worked out, is very easily operated.

I firmly believe this theatre will do over double the amount of business any other suburban theatre in Atlanta does - due, in my opinion, solely to the ORCHESTRAPHONE.

I will be more than glad to have you refer any prospects to me, for first-hand information on this instrument.

I realize there are several similar machines on the market today - however - it is only necessary to compare the tone, reproduction, etc., to decide in favor of the ORCHESTRAPHONE.

Yours very truly,
EMPIRE THEATRE,
President & Manager.

Theatre Goers are Comfort Lovers the World Over!

Progressive theatre owners appreciate the tremendous attraction of "comfort" to the theatre-going public. Whatever the program that is being offered, the public looks first to the house where their comfort is assured. American Seating Company offers theatre owners and managers a wide selection of chairs whose qualities of beauty and comfort stimulate box office receipts. Significant, too, is the exclusive use of this company's seating by the nation's foremost exhibitors.

American Seating Chairs are in harmony with the beauty of the Paramount Theatre as illustrated in this interior view.

No. 4078 Special Chair—3,561 of these chairs were installed in the Paramount Theatre. Seat upholstered in red Moroccoline, with rose mohair back and brown mahogany finished wood parts. Aisle lights built into chair standards and noiseless ball bearing seat hinges.

Creative and Selling Branches Still at Odds Over "Must" Credits

Artists Demand Mention in All Advertising and Exhibitors Want Freedom to Use or Eliminate Production Credit Lines

AMONG the unchanged features of the Standard Contract, which underwent certain revisions at the Chicago conferences last February and which became effective May 1, 1928, the following provision covering theatre advertising, appears in paragraph the twelfth:

"The exhibitor also agrees to advertise and announce each photoplay as a ———. In all newspaper advertising and publicity issued by the exhibitor relating to said photoplays the exhibitor shall adhere to the form of announcement contained in the advertising matter issued by the distributor. All advertising accessories used by the exhibitor in connection with the exhibition of said photoplays must be leased from or through the distributor ———."

And that provision, according to reliable information, was the bone of rather heated and prolonged contention between the exhibitor and distributor representatives at the contract conference. That it was one of the most difficult points the conference was called upon to settle, it is not hard to believe. The exhibitor does not like to be in the position of having to include "credits" or mention of names associated with the production which mean little or nothing to the public he is addressing with his selling matter. On the other hand, the distributor is bound by contract to mention, according to specified phraseology and often "per cent of size of type" the names of others than the star and the director—both of which are usually box-office factors—in all his advertistising and publicity for the picture. This is forced upon the distributor by the producer who in turn is forced to include certain credits for the players, scenarists, authors and sometimes supervisors under contract to him.

That being the case, the matter comes down to a responsibility which the artist must shoulder. But before bringing charges of "personal vanity" against the actor, author, director, etc., it is well to remember that this picture business is a personality business, and that the artist's contribution provides something without which there could be no finished work. Frequently it is the skill of the scenarist or others associated with a production which supplies the vital spark accounting for the outstanding quality of a star's performance or a directorial achievement. The fact that the artist finds it necessary to his or her future opportunity to develop talents and find that place in the sun of popularity to which they are entitled, is the reason back of the demands made by these specialists that their names be used in connection with all billing.

If ever there is worked out a solution of this problem—and from the standpoint of the exhibitor and the theatre advertising man it is a most important matter—the goal will be reached through a better understanding all around by everybody—artists, producers, distributors and exhibitors.

The artist's demand that his name appear in connection with billing for a picture he has contributed to, the producer's demand and the distributor's demands owing to these contractual obligations, are legitimate. Equally legitimate is the exhibitor's contention that the inclusion of many credits or "must go" lines often defeats the purpose of his advertising, which is to deliver a concise message briefly.

One of the first rules the student of advertising learns is that only those selling points which can aid in creating the desired impression on the reader must be included in the advertisement. The desired impression for a theatre advertisement to make, of course, is that the entertainment is of a quality that will please. Since the advertiser is forced to pay for the space his ad is given in the paper, he wishes to make the best possible use of it and that from the advertising man's standpoint is to have sufficient white space left after his essential selling lines have been included.

BUT much more in the poster billing than the newspaper advertising is this "must go" copy a handicap. The agerage outdoor advertisement is visible only for a short time. Therefore to be effective it must not contain too much copy, because if there are too many words or too many details the eye finds nothing to rest upon and, while it wanders from one part of the display to another the prospect passes by the board and the message which the poster is designed to convey is lost.

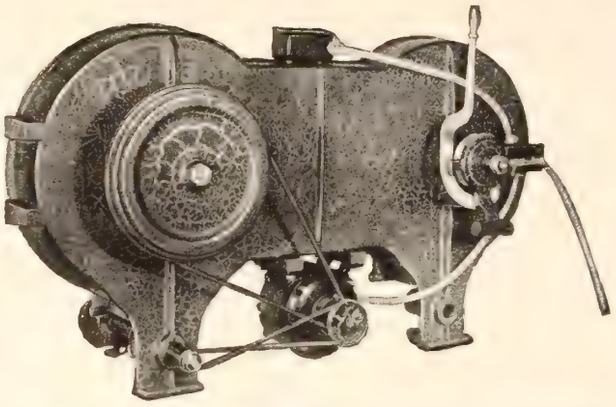
These are the A B C's of advertising, but at the same time it might lead to a better understanding of the exhibitor's problem with regard to advertising, if they were considered by those who demand the credits.

There are places where the entire credit list may be used to good advantage—in trade advertising, the leader on the film and the printed program, the advance trailer and in newspaper publicity notices, or readers.

It would hardly be fair to the artist, however, to ask him or her to leave to the discretion of the exhibitor when and how his or her name will be mentioned, or whether it will be mentioned at all.

On the other hand, it is very much a question if the credits which some of the artists demand and get in such advertising mediums as posters and newspaper displays, bring them fame or popularity. When a reputation has been established the exhibitor is only too anxious to use that name as a featured selling point in his general advertising. Experience seems to indicate that the artists establish their reputations on the screen itself.

WE have the case of Rudolph Valentino—as one of a great many—in the presentation of "The Four Horsemen." This actor had been in pictures several years before Rex Ingram cast him for the principle male role in the Ibanez novel. He had played leading roles previously. When the Ingram spectacle was released aVlentino was not played up in the billing, but he was in his later works, and for the very good reason that the artist by his performance in that picture established himself as a popular personality.



The same picture "made" June Mathis, a scenarist whose name took on magic that made it an advertising feature as a result of her association with the production of "The Four Horsemen."

Frequently we hear criticism of the posters and display material issued by the distributors. In the majority of cases the failure to produce posters that have sales punch is due to the extensive use of credits forced on the artist. And nobody knows that better than the poster artists themselves, many of whom have voiced their protest against the practice.

What can be done to bring about an end to the situation, it is not possible to say. Ultimately all the conflicting forces may be able to get together on a basis of understanding one with the other, and a classification of advertising mediums may be made. Upon this classification the contract with the artist may call for "credit" in specified mediums of advertising. If the time comes when the poster designer can limit the copy to the very essentials, the copy writer and ad layout man can include in his displays only the features which he knows will sell the picture to the public, there will be rejoicing, and they will—it is a safe bet—give better than just adequate display to the names of all players authors, scenarists, supervising directors, camera men, art directors, in direct by mail ads, publicity notices, house programs, house organs, and lobby display material—where the publicity will mean something to the artist.

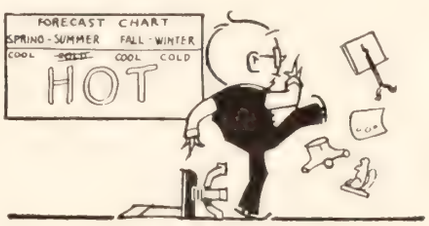
The Sad Plight of the A.W.F.

[AMATEUR WEATHER FORECASTER]

1927 was to be the year with NO summer! The A. W. F.'s had it all figured out. According to the Sun Spots, the Length of Fur on the North Side of a Squirrel, and the Roundness of the Rings in a Petrified Tree, there would be no summer.

You can't fool an Amateur Weather Forecaster—no, sir!

Quite a number of them, about to install Arctic Nu-Air systems for cooling and ventilating, decided to follow the dope—and the dope said, "No summer." Then the usual hot spells hit, and it was very sad—painfully sad.



The dope went haywire, and the dopesters were bewildered.

Theater goers, having no scientific instruments for weather forecasting, simply stayed away from shows. They spent their money for ice cream and electric fans and gas for their cars.

The A. W. F.'s decided that something was radically wrong. They wired rush orders for Arctic Nu-Air Systems. They seemed to think that these systems could be sent by parcels post. They were annoyed to find so many empty seats in their houses, and no Arctic Nu-Air Systems coming in by special delivery mail.

It cost many of them several thousand dollars each to "save" the modest cost of a complete Arctic Nu-Air System. Some admitted that they could have bought two or three systems and still be money ahead.

Our suggestion for 1928—buy your Arctic Nu-Air System NOW, and then do all the weather forecasting you like. No matter how the Sun Spots, or the Fur on the North Side of a Squirrel, or the Tree Rings happen to work, you can still do a bigger business all the year around with the Arctic Nu-Air System installed.

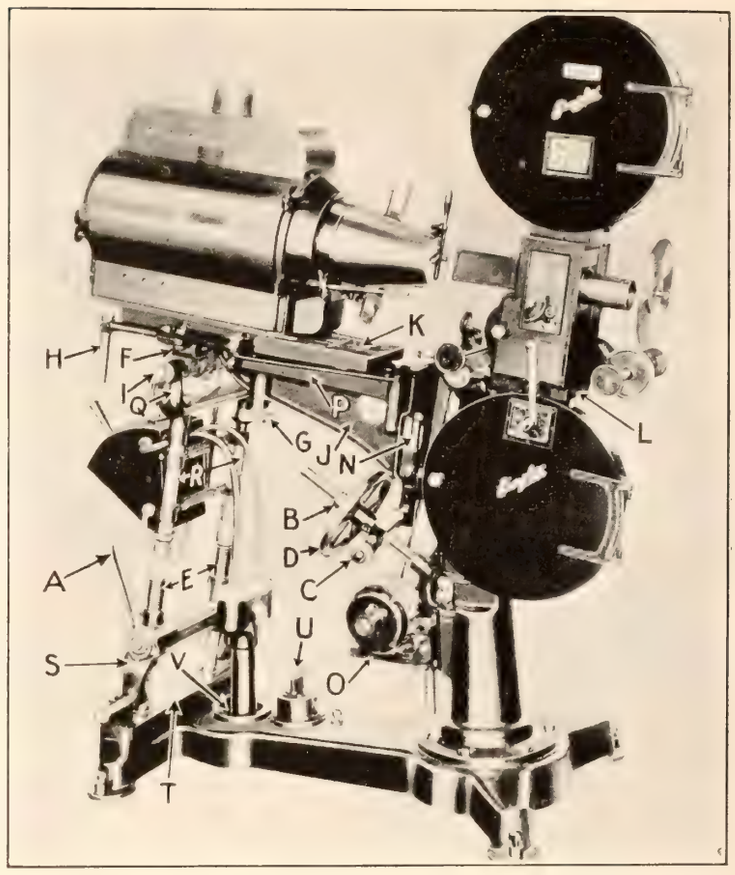
New Simplex Stand Marks Advance in Projector Design

THE International Projector Corporation has announced a new stand for the Simplex Projector. This stand is a decided advance in motion picture projector design and meets many of the requirements created by the present demand for better projection. This stand was created by Augusto Dina, Chief Engineer of the International Projector Corporation.



Not long ago progress in the Technical Departments of the motion picture industry was greatly hampered by lack of engineering knowledge and indifference. But of late, with the greater realization by this industry of the importance of projection, has come an interest and willingness on the part of users to pay for worthwhile improvements and on the part of manufacturers to devote their efforts to improving equipment.

One of the problems that the engineers of the International Projector Corporation have appreciated, has been the tendency toward unsteadiness in projectors, due to the excessive weight and bulk of auxiliary equipment with which projectors have been equipped. The large lamp house, high intensity lamp, Vitaphone, Movietone and other apparatus which call for special equipment to be placed on projectors were not to be reckoned with a few years ago. This equipment is subjecting projectors to demands and strains which were not anticipated by the original designers.

Attempts to overcome unsteadiness caused by this additional equipment have proved inadequate and weight and bulk were largely depended upon to maintain balance. The Simplex pedestal and five point pedestal, which were employed to secure steadiness, served for a period but even these did not prove satisfactory. Various braces were used but such devices have their limitations and while it is true that the defects of the earlier designs were partially overcome by these substitutes, they were unsatisfactory because they failed to supply true balance and rigidity.

It was to secure this balance and rigidity that the new Simplex stand was developed. A detailed description of this stand follows:

The four main assemblies of the New Model M, Simplex Stand, the Pedestal, Carriage, Adjustable Support and Base—constitute a single symmetrical unit, with ample weight so distributed that all unsteadiness is eliminated. The stand rests on six leveling points and the projector is not attached to the floor or fastened to the building in any way, but proper distribution of weight makes it impossible to disturb the balance of the projector by any ordinary means.

On the right is a photo showing the new Model M Simplex Projector featuring a newly designed vibrationless stand. The mechanical features of the new base are described in detail in the accompanying article under designations corresponding to the lettering on the cut.

All parts of the Simplex stand are larger and heavier than in former models and the pedestal or column is of sturdy construction. The pedestal arm L extends under the full width of the mechanism, not part way as heretofore, and the mechanism is held by four screws in place of two. This provides a very substantial table and the pedestal arm swings easily but is firmly held by a steel bolt.

The underslung motor table O is close to the base and the motor is readily accessible for oiling or regulating. It can be raised or lowered on its supporting rod by merely loosening two heavy wing screws. The position of the motor on the stand is an important factor in eliminating vibration.

TO tilt the projector, it is simply necessary to release locking handle A, attached to the rear adjustable support, loosen pedestal adjustment locking nuts B and C and pedestal adjustment hand wheel D can then be easily turned with either hand to give desired angle. Micrometer adjustment can be made by means of the hand wheel, and compression spring E on the rear adjustable support make this extremely comfortable, as these can be easily regulated by knurled nuts to eliminate weight action or, if desired, to deliver powerful upward pressure. When A, B and C are again locked, the projector is held rigidly in the proper position.

The lamphouse can be placed in position for slides very quickly and without difficulty by loosening two knobs F and G, and drawing slide over arm handle H for the correct placing. Lamphouse carriage K turns on the lamphouse pivot N and at G and slides over carriage rod I and the rear adjustable support. The operation is simple as the long slide over arm J with the auxiliary arm P, stablizes the movement while permitting full flexibility of action. When F and G are again locked, lamphouse carriage K is held in position.

The lamphouse carriage of the stand is much longer than heretofore, providing greater distance between centers to insure stability and supplying a full firm base for the largest size lamphouse. This carriage has adequate openings providing ample ventilation.

The rear adjustable support is a new feature of the Simplex and provides an adequate rear support which is an integral part of the stand. This support is substantially constructed and so designed that the largest lamphouse may be used without disturbing the balance of the projector. It consists of an upper fork Q, two rods R and a lower fork S and swings on the pivot casting T.

When the locking handle A operates, it releases a friction lock and support rods R are free to slip through the lower fork S. When the locking handle A is released, the adjustable support ceases to act and hangs idle from the swinging table. When locked, the rods and two forks constitute a structure that firmly connects the swinging table to the base. The 100 ampere switch and switch box are attached to the rear support.

The base is also a departure in design and construction as it is much wider, longer, and rests on six adjustable leveling points. A foot motor switch U for starting and stopping the projector is supplied.

When You Flash This on your screen It Makes a BIG HIT!

Your patrons can tell, the moment they enter your theatre, whether or not you have a modern ventilating system. If the atmosphere is stuffy and close, they will hesitate a long time before again giving you their patronage. But—provide for them, and tell them about, the efficient system of Lakeside ventilation that creates and maintains a cool, comfortable atmosphere through every minute of the performance, and you may be sure of a steady stream of business.

Aggressive Houses Are Changing to This Modern Method of Ventilation

Theatres throughout the country find that Lakeside Ventilators assure the best equipment available today. Their tremendous power, quiet operation, and easy installation mean the utmost in service with practically no up-keep. Then, too, a Lakeside costs much less than many of the complicated cooling and ventilating systems on the market. You take no chances with Lakeside Equipment, because it is backed by a reliable guarantee. It must "make good" in actual service.

Empty Seats Pay No Profits

Competition is keen. Your theatre must be modernized in every way. You need an efficient ventilating system, and the Lakeside has been approved by ventilating engineers throughout the United States. Lakeside Ventilators are made in different sizes to meet every requirement and, if you will let us know the size, capacity, etc., of your theatre, we will be glad to submit suggestions and quotations without obligation to you. K-A Technician Develops High Intensity Spot

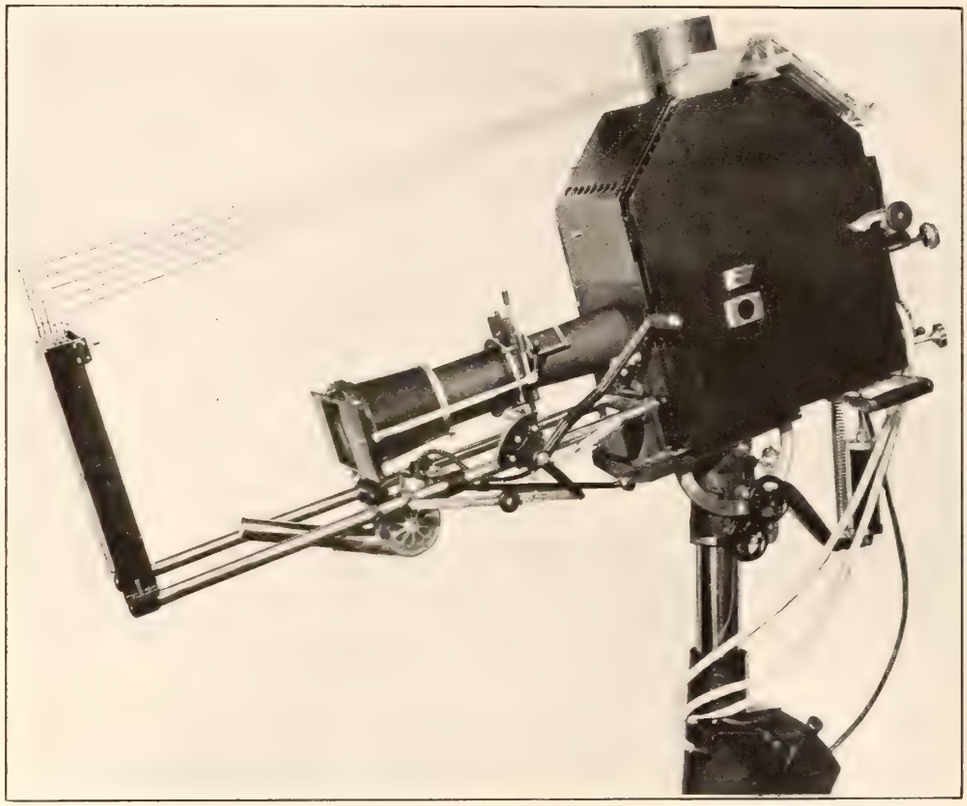
A HIGH INTENSITY SPOTLIGHT has been perfected by the Keith-Albee-Orpheum Projection Department in conjunction with Hall & Connolly Co.

The salient points of the new light, which has been installed in the E. F. Albee Theatre, Brooklyn, and will be added to the equipment of the other Keith-Albee-Orpheum houses as soon as they can be made, are these:

Gives three times the amount of illumination of the carbon arc light for a given amount of current or amperage.

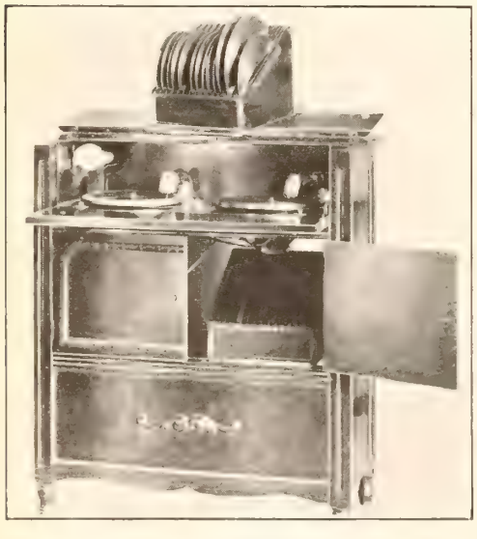


Projects a quality of light having all the appearance of strong sunlight, and brings out colors in stronger contrast.

Projects a perfect round spot.

So flexible that a number of effects can be accomplished with great ease.

It can also be used as a flood light and as an effect machine. The lamp and lamphouse are mounted on a suitable adjustable and counter-balanced stand. Moveable condenser lens carriage is provided in the lamphouse so that the light may be focused without moving the lamp burner. Various effects can be secured by merely moving the operating handle.



H. H. Stoll of the K-A technical department, has been working to perfect the light for eighteen months.

The photo above shows the high Intensity Spotlight developed by the K-A-O technical department in association with Hall & Connolly Co.

Amplifier Phonograph Unit for Theatres Announced

THE Platter Cabinet Co., North Vernon, Indiana, has introduced on the market an amplified phonograph unit especially designed for use in motion picture theatres. Two types of machines have been designed for this purpose, one with the speaker unit included in the cabinet and the other for use with the Puro-Power giant horn.

Puro-Tone Musical Reproduction Unit for Theatres

The Platter Cabinet Co., are manufacturers of the Puropower air column speakers, which are used in connection with the reproducing unit. According to an announcement by the company, their engineers have been experimenting with this development for the past two years.

The reproducing unit is equipped with two turntables with electrical pickups and a throw switch which enables the operator to cue pictures by instantaneous change-over from one record to another The turntables are motor driven, General Electric motors being used.

The illustration on this page shows the number 765 Puro-Tone reproducing unit, which contains a compartment for records. Another unit offered by the company has a self-contained speaker at the base of the cabinet.

New A. C. Manual Starter Is Offered by Cutler-Hammer

A NEW manual across the line A.C. motor starter (CH-9115) is announced by The Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co., of Milwaukee, Wis. Designed to meet the need for an inexpensive manual starter, it includes such advantages as overload cutouts giving motor protection; cadmium plated, double break, roller type contacts; and small size, safety, dust-proof enclosing case.

The roller type contacts seem to be the forerunner of an unusual trend in motor control design. They are of the double break type, cadmium plated, and by breaking the arc in two places, give several times the life of ordinary contacts. In addition, the contact rollers turn after each operation to present a new contact surface for the next operation.

Complete motor protection is obtained during both the starting and running periods. The thermal overload cutouts provide the necessary time interval to take care of starting inrushes without shutting down the motor.

The Modern Picture Theatre—An Outline of Management and Operation

By Harold B. Franklin

President West Coast Theatres

THE management of motion picture theatres has been developed to a high degree and has risen to the dignity of a profession. There are over fifteen thousand persons in the United States who are managing theatres of different types, and the experiences of these men have developed certain definite methods, which has in a measure established a practice which controls the different phases of theatre management.

The operation of a successful theatre requires men of versatile capacity. It is a business requiring knowledge of many elements of the theatre, and consists of a highly detailed operation. The manager of a theatre has certain specific duties; to plan, to make decisions, to select capable assistants, to inspire a spirit of loyalty among his staff, and to strive to make his theatre a public institution. Although he takes guidance from the tendencies of patrons toward amusement, he must be the supersalesman in the respect that he induces people to respond. He cannot cater to patrons unless he is an alert, responsible executive, conscious of the problems of his business, and is conversant with details, though not ridden by them. A man driving a team does not pull the wagon—he holds the reins and keeps an eye on the road.

Good management requires business judgment besides a familiarity with the different departments of a theatre. It is not necessary for a manager to be able to understand the details of projection, for example, but the successful manager should be able to distinguish good from bad projection, and the progressive manager keeps abreast with the improvements that are brought forth in that field. In the same way, the manager must know when music is satisfactory or not. Many managers attend to their own advertising and publicity, and those who operate theatres large enough to employ advertising experts, must distinguish the difference between effective and wasteful advertising.

By planning future operations carefully, management avoids mistakes, and clarifies the policies of a theatre. Timeliness in theatre operation is a consideration almost impossible of overemphasis. It is not enough to anticipate a holiday and to plan a program accordingly. The alert manager is on his toes to keep pace with public-spirited movements. He must breathe the spirit of the day and thus capture the confidence of the public.

Just as it is the understood purpose of the theatre to sell entertainment, so it is the function of management to sell service.

Since the theatre is a commercial enterprise, one of the managers' duties in relation to the public is to have a keen notion of competition. He must not be lulled into a feeling of satisfaction or security, but must strive for better and better results if his theatre is to maintain its progress. When a manager finds himself waiting for the competitor to show him what to do, instead of going him one better, he has fallen behind the march of the times and dropped behind in the procession.

Management's objective can be summed up in two words—GOOD WILL. No theatre can be successful without good will. Very few institutions are so sensitive to good will as is the motion picture theatre. The entire staff must have an instinct for hospitality. Each employe constitutes an important part that makes the whole staff one perfect host.

SO far I have spoken almost entirely of the manager, because it is upon him that the emphasis falls. We know of course that any number of people, from a handful to hundreds, are needed to keep the theatre going. But these people in the final analysis, either spell one management, or the theatre has failed. The girl who sells tickets is not working for herself. If she is, the organization has one decided weak link. She is that part of management that sells tickets, and unless she understands that, she is incapable of representing the theatre and furthering its policy. And what applies to her, applies equally to the projectionists, the musicians or any one else on a theatre staff.

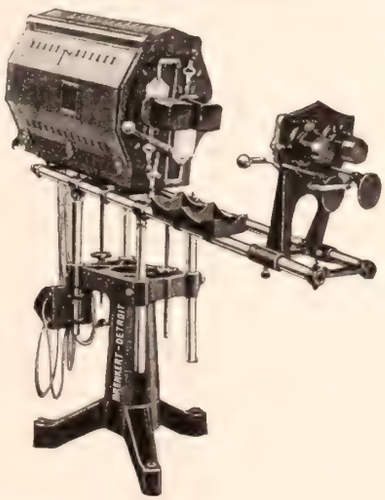
Every act of management, even to hiring employes or buying supplies, must be actuated by the urge to acquire good will. The manager cannot conceivably show each patron to his seat, so he engages ushers to do it for him; instead of scrubbing floors with his own hands, he keeps his theatre clean with the hands of the porters and the scrubwoman. Every element of the organization is an extension of the theatre policy.

The successful manager must have a "show sense" or instinct as to the public's amusement appetite, and should himself be a man of taste. All of these qualifications spell the elements that make for the word "showmanship." Not every manager can qualify as to these requisites, but that's the kind of manager that the industry is striving for, and men of this type are being developed more and more as we go on; in the same degree that we encourage and develop managers who qualify, so will the business itself continue to grow and prosper, for with good management, theatres and entertainments are made more inviting, and patronage is increased. Nothing tends toward stabilizing the business of theatre operation as much as the development of the right kind of man power.

THEATRE management is the determining factor as to the location, architecture, size and type of theatre, as well as the financial set-up of such ventures. It can readily be appreciated that sound judgment on such matters can be determined only after careful analysis of the needs of a community, and that snap judgment is likely to result in huge losses. For example, there can be no reason for a theatre where there are too many seats already, and frequently theatres meet with disaster, where the investment is too great for a given community. Ripe experience as well as judgment guard against such mistakes. To insure success there must be the need for the theatre that is being planned; otherwise there is no foundation on which to build a successful business.

As a theatre approaches completion, management's next step is the selection of the operating staff. The type and size of staff depends a great deal on the kind of theatre that is to be rated. Management must plan the type of entertainment as well as the policy; such factors are greatly determined by the location and size as well as the clientele that is to be catered to. Different types of theatres differ in their requirements in this respect. The problems, the possibilties, the ingenuities of management will show a thousand and one distinctions between this house and that, one manager to another—to say nothing of the manifold differences of music, advertising, service and even sanitation which set off one amusement center from all the rest.

Since these various groups are well defined in the industry, it stands to reason that management must bear in mind the kind of patronage to be attracted, and must act accordingly. Care must be taken to insure the surroundings and accommodations which will attract and hold the desired patronage.



Careful analysis, determined through sound judgment and experience, is essential in establishing the definite policy of the theatre. Mistaken judgment in this respect may seriously affect its future. After determining the policy, management must plan the personnel, and carefully select those who will fill the posi-

Brenkert "F-6" Reflector Arc for Dissolving Slide Projection Reduces Operating Costs 50% Produces Better Effects

The Brenkert F-6 dissolving slide projector is today the outstanding value in the motion picture field. No other single piece of projection equipment offers so much and costs so little as does this latest Brenkert creation.

It combines the lowest possible operating costs and the lowest first cost, with projection results which are far superior to those obtained with any other dissolving slide projector now on the market.

Instead of two large cumbersome, hand-operated arcs, you now are offered a single low-amperage, automatically fed, arc which can be operated from small and large generators alike. In place of yellow, poorly defined screen pictures, you now have brilliant, snow-white, slide projection sharply defined from edge to edge. This, and many other features combine to raise the quality of slide projection to a level never before attained.

You simply cannot go wrong in choosing the Brenkert F-6 because, in addition to the above assurances of complete satisfaction at a most reasonable price, you have the usual Brenkert guarantee which stipulates that every Brenkert projector is a product of the highest quality. If found not to be so, it is returnable.

And remember, the Brenkert F-6 will pay for itself in the first year's operation. Invest now, and let this machine be a present to yourself one year from today.

Why use make-shifts and mediocre equipment when the best costs the least?

Ash Quits Chicago After 3 Year Reign as Jazz King

Paul Ash, king of jazz, after three successful years in Chicago, where his particular form of entertainment acquired phenomenal popularity, will conduct his farewell show at the Oriental Theatre on May 5th, and a week later will start playing at the Paramount Theatre in New York City.

Paul Ash went to Chicago three years ago, opening at McVickers Theatre, where he occupied the stage for one solid year and built up a tremendous following. He was called upon to open the new Oriental Theatre and has been there for the past two years, becoming a Chicago institution.

Ash has conducted more than 4,500 performances and it is estimated played to more than 14,700,000 persons during his Chicago engagements, which is said to be an unequalled record. His fan mail often totalled two thousand letters per week.

He will be succeeded at the Oriental by Brooke Johns, who for many weeks was the personality director at the stage shows at Skouras Brothers Missouri theatre in St. Louis. Skouras Brothers negotiated for the services of Johns for their Circle theatre in Indianapolis, and failing to bring the move to a successful issue have sent Eddie Pardo there to act as master of ceremonies.

The Missouri theatre shows are to be presided over by Eddie Peabody, one of the most popular band leaders of the Pacific Coast picture theatres, who will fill the position formerly held by Brooke Johns.

Pending the arrival of Peabody, Arthur Nealy is acting as master of ceremonies at the Missouri.

The passing of Johns from the Missouri Theatre has caused some resentment on the part of the fair young persons who make up a very large part of that theatre's audiences. Numerous letters of protest have been received at the headquarters of Skouras Brothers Enterprises during the past weeks.

The official spokesman for Skouras Brothers replied that it was similar to the trade that sent Rogers Hornsby from St. Louis after winning a world's championship and brought Frankie Frisch to St. Louis.

"We kindly ask our patrons to await the coming of Eddie Peabody, who will open at the Missouri either on May 5 or 12 before passing final judgment on this big deal," he said.

Plans Revolving Parquet For Berlin Theatre

According to an A. P. dispatch from Berlin, Walter Gropius, noted German architect, is at work devising a new type of theatre in which the parquet with its audience can be turned at an angle of 180 degrees, thus moving mechanical devices developed for the stage across the footlights. The revolving parquet will have the effect of transporting the audience from one part of the round theatre to another, where an entirely different stage setting from that which they gazed upon from a previous angle will greet the spectator.

Gropius also plans to make arrangements for motion picture representations projected onto the vaulted ceiling. The film scenes are to augment and complement the action on the stage.

These advanced theatrical devices are being developed for the theatre which the architect is designing for Erwin Piscator of Berlin, director of the only Communist theatre in Germany.

Chewing Gum More Deadly to Rug Than Tread of Feet

Chewing gum dropped by careless patrons of the Roxy theatre in New York City has done more to damage the rug laid in the foyer more than a year ago, than the tread of feet of more than 6,500,000 people, according to C. W. Griswold, the manager, in a letter to the makers of the rug. The rug was woven at the Mohawk Carpet Mills in Amsterdam, N. Y., and is the largest of its kind in the world. The weight of the rug is two tons and a half. The thickness is one inch.

Roxy Honor Guest at Dinner of Broadway Association

S. L. Rothafel was the honor guest at a dinner and dedication ceremonial given last Monday evening, April 30, by the Broadway Association. The dinner, which was held at the Manger Hotel, was followed by the unveiling of a bronze tablet in the lobby of the Roxy theatre.

The tribute was accorded Roxy in recognition of his civic contribution during the period of his theatrical activities on Broadway, during which he lead the advance of the de luxe motion picture theatre.

Roxy came to New York from the Middle West fifteen years ago and established himself in the Regent theatre at 116th Street and Seventh Avenue, where his unique methods of picture presentation soon attracted the attendance of downtown theatre-goers.

A year later he was called to open the Strand theatre on Broadway, the first de luxe motion picture theatre to present pictures with synchronization of music and color. Subsequently, he directed the opening of the Rialto and the Rivoli theatres and later was called to institute his presentation ideas at the Capitol.

Eberson Engaged to Design 3 More for Australasian

John Eberson has been engaged to design three new theatres to be built by Australasian Films, Ltd., in Sydney, Australia. Stuart Doyle, president of Australasian will be in the United States soon and will make arrangements with the architect for these additional houses to be built and operated by his company. According to an announcement from John Eberson's office, the new houses will be planned, decorated and furnished and the supervision of the building will be directly handled by his organization. This will necessitate Eberson's sending an architect to Sydney in connection with the work.

The Capitol theatre in Sydney, built by Australasian and designed by Eberson, was opened April 11, and met with an enthusiastic reception by the theatregoers there.

Stage Dialogue as Advance Announcement for Film

A novel method of presentation employed to announce the following week's screen attraction was tried out with considerable success at the Chicago theatre, Chicago, recently. The announcement was made in the form of a telephone conversation between a young man and a young woman appearing in small settings arranged at either side of the stage, and gave the details of the coming attraction, "The Crowd" in the course of a talk over the wire. The method used in this presentation is best illustrated by the following dialogue, which ensued when the young man called a number and the young woman answered the call at her phone across the stage:

Betty:—(picks up receiver) "Hello!"
Jack:—"Hello, is this Betty?"
Betty:—"Yes, this is Betty, who's calling?"
Jack:—"This is Jack."
Betty:—((Jubilant.) "Jack? Well, well, well, when did you get back from Los Angeles?"

Jack:—"Just this morning, dear, and say, Betty, while I was out in Los Angeles, what do you think? I visited one of the moving picture studios in Hollywood where they were making some of the scenes of that great picture—'The Crowd'."

Betty:—"'The Crowd'? Say, I've heard a lot of wonderful comments about the picture; in all the write-ups I've read, the critics were unanimous in their praise of it."

Jack:—"Really, Betty, I think it's positively one of the greatest motion pictures that was ever produced."

Betty:—"What is it like?"

Jack:—"'The Crowd' is a story of every man and his wife—their courtship—their marriage and parenthood. Most dramas end with marriage, but this one has its beginning with marriage."

Betty:—"Tell me, Jack, who are the stars in the picture?"

Jack:—"Eleanor Boardman and James Murray, and they give two of the best performances of their careers."

Betty:—"Who produced 'The Crowd'?"

Jack:—"King Vidor, and its the first picture he has directed since "The Big Parade," and in this story, he has dared to expose marriage as it has never been exposed before. 'The Crowd' originally was shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York, at popular prices, but after one week of sensational success, it was moved to the Astor Theatre at two dollars admission, the first time in the history of motion pictures that a screen production has achieved such an honor."

Betty:—"When will 'The Crowd' be shown in Chicago, Jack?"

Jack:—"Next week, starting Monday at the Chicago Theatre and at regular Chicago Theatre prices. What night would you like to see it, Betty?"

Betty:—"Any night you say."

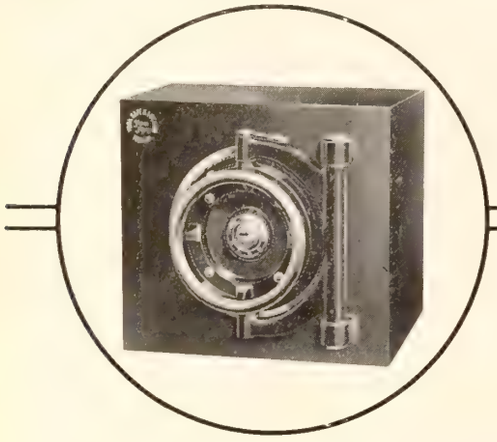
Jack:—"All right, keep every night next week open, for after you see it once, you'll probably want to see it two or three times."

Betty:—"How about taking Mother and Dad along?"

Jack:—"O. K., we'll take the crowd to see 'The Crowd."

Toward the end of this, the National Screen Service trailer on "The Crowd" was shown on the screen.

This is an example of good showmanship and was very well received by the audience, as the presenting of the trailer in this manner was most unusual and brought forth much favorable comment.



This can be done on almost any picture, and by almost any size house, as the expense involved is slight.

Bridge Authority to Appear On Capitol Stage

Milton C. Work, Auction Bridge authority, has been engaged to appear on the stage of the Capitol theatre, New York, during the week of May 12th. He will appear on the stage immediately following the screening of the picture "Auction Bridge," in which he stars. The film, a two reel production in technicolor is the first of its kind. Mr. Work will deliver a brief talk on the game at the de luxe performances. At the close of his stage discourse, Mr. Work will retire to the theatre foyer where he will answer questions put to him by the theatre patrons during the afternoon and evening performances.

The Exhibitor-Made Press Book is Making Good in in Theatre Campaigns for "Speedy" rector, was launched with a pre-view for newspaper writers in an aeroplane. This stunt, by the way, is one of the press book ideas included in the suggested campaign submitted by Oscar A. Doob, of the Kunsky theatres, Detroit. The lobby of the Million Dollar theatre was decorated to suggest the rear of a horse car. Another press book suggestion here. One of the biggest tieups accorded a picture was arranged with the General Gasoline Company, which advertised a product known as "Speedy Gasoline." This also was among the press book suggestions and it is one which has been very widely used by other theatres. The Los Angeles company put out thousands of specially designed posters, displaying them at their stations in California, Oregon, Washington and Arizona. One of the outstanding accomplishments in the Los Angeles campaign was a five-page co-operative advertising and publicity section which Reddy arranged with the Los Angeles Express. This section appeared in the regular edition of the Express the day before the "Speedy" opening at the Million Dollar theatre.

Bill Hollander and his assistant, Bill Pyne, exploited "Speedy" at the Roosevelt, Chicago, with an attractive theatre front. But the stunt which seems to have topped them all was the tieup arranged with the Post-Office Department. Banners were placed on all mail trucks. This was a variation of one of the press book ideas. The display carried a large head of Lloyd, in addition to suitable copy which, in part, read, "Speedy Delivery." A tieup was also arranged with the concern controlling Weighing Machines at all Subway and "L" stations, a sticker being placed on each machine, copy on which read: "Speedy says—Step on It." This idea was also worked to advantage in connection with the Los Angeles showing.

F. W. McManus, who handles the publicity and advertising for the Publix Houses in which "Speedy" was shown first run in Boston came through with a glorious campaign. Featured among his various exploits was a teaser campaign in the subways and sniped all over Greater Boston, copy reading as follows: "Speedy says—Get the Hit-and-Run Driver," and "Speedy says—Use the 'L'" A tieup was also worked out with the leading ice cream company in Boston, in which was in the nature of a duplicate of the Horton tieup in New York. Another tieup was arranged with the Kresge Company music departments in conjunction with a radio stunt. The Checker Cab Company used a sticker on the rear of every taxi window which read: "Speedy says—Speedy Service." A representative showing of billboards were used, in addition to 25,000 roto sections.

Another campaign of extraordinary merit and effect was put over in Atlanta, Ga., in conjunction with the showing of "Speedy" at the Howard Theatre. One hundred tire covers were used on the Black and White Company's cabs; five hundred drug store stickers carrying a cut of Lloyd with suitable copy were distributed, while a street ballyhoo of an old dilapidated flivver was drawn through the main streets before and during the run. The car was pulled by an old mule and it carried heads of Lloyd and a banner announcing playdates. Two thousand stickers announcing the extension of the matinee until 6:30 o'clock were placed on restaurant menus. Arrangements were made whereby the Brunswick Recording Company donated thirty-five "Speedy Boy" records.

The campaigns cited by no means cover the ground entirely as to the number of press book ideas which found actual application by the theatre men. However, they are typical, and indicates the extensive manner in which such tieups as the street car company, ice cream company, oil and gasoline distributors, and other press book suggestions are being employed by the exhibitors in selling "Speedy" to their public.

By Harold B. Franklin

tions. In the technical positions, only men of experience should be considered, although experience is not necessary in the service department, providing those that are considered, are apt, young and well-educated. Naturally they must be well recommended. The task of training this staff becomes a matter of great importance until the opening of the doors of the new theatre. Every individual employe is instructed in detail, not merely in the routine of his task, but in the manner of performing it in accord with the highest standards. Specific instructions leave no doubt, and are administered to new employes by every means possible; word of mouth, written rules and by example as well as drill. The maintenance of discipline is important in guaranteeing proper service. The best discipline is one that is not noticeable, but that nevertheless exists. The operation of a theatre can be compared with that of a ship, where every member of the crew, from bridge to engine room, knows his place and does his duty.

The operator of a small theatre books his own pictures, buys his own supplies, perhaps acts as cashier or doorman, and sometimes projects his own pictures. His theatre outgrows its possibilities, and he moves to a larger building. This newer theatre demands more time, maknig it necessary for him to concentrate on management. He engages an assistant to whom he delegates some of the responsibility. In a larger theatre, the manager has control of each department, even though he delegates the actual work to others. He, therefore, is able to concentrate on administration, while assistants carry on the routine—that is organization! In this way, theatre operation is divided into departments, with clearly defined obligations. Each department head is generally an expert in his work. For every function there is a department. No department of motion picture theatre operation is more important than projection, and it is gratifying to note that constant improvement in personnel as well as booth equipment, is establishing a better uniform quality of projection. New innovations and developments, fostered to a great extent by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, have contributed toward a result that is establishing definite standards. This is fortunate, indeed, as good projection is of utmost importance, and there cannot be any compromise in that respect.

The importance of color and its application in relation to illumination, both for decorative as well as stage effects, is of great importance. The effective use of light in the theatre is of great value when its possibilities are carefully studied. The proper use of color helps to put patrons into moods sympathetic with the action on the stage or screen. Light may be used by the master electricians as music by the composer, and he can render color harmonies as if they were woven into a musical symphony. That there is a psychological effect produced by certain colors has been established by illumination engineers. No single color can produce a satisfactory result, any more than one note can produce melody in music. It is the combination of shades and their variations which produce a harmonious effect. Contrast, an excellent variant in any art, may be achieved through the use of harmonious colors in theatre lighting. Color is used to good advantage in conjunction with music during the playing of solos and special stage numbers.

Advertising is the mouthpiece of the theatre. Management must display showmanship in advertising just as much as on the screen and on the stage. It can do a great deal towards adding to or detracting from the good will of a theatre. Needless to point out, advertising must always be honest with the public. There can be no exaggeration if it is to be effective. Great strides have been made in the past few years in the character of the advertising of motion picture theatre. Extravagant adjectives used to be very commonplace, and even today motion picture audiences read such ads with a great amount of tolerance. Among more progressive managements, however, advertising is prepared by men who carefully plan their campaigns, and every effort is made to appeal honestly to the patron. Style has replaced worn-out phrases, and good layouts and illustrations have taken the place of extravagant use of space.

Ticket Registers and "Tickets That Fit"

The Gold Seal is the only ticket register that has only one driving mechanism. The lubrication is sealed in; so it never requires attention. Case hardened steel protects the points of wear. There are bronze bushings on the driving shaft. The exposed steel is rust-proofed.

These are a few of the many points of superiority that make the Gold Seal the best ticket register on the market.

Illumination

Possibly the feature of the projected picture which most affects the pleasure and comfort of the patron is brightness.

This characteristic deserves more attention than it generally receives, for the brightest picture is not necessarily the most satisfactory. Glaringly bright pictures are all too common in our theaters today.

Illumination depends upon many factors, among which the lens is second only to the illuminant itself. The extent to which illumination is affected by the lens depends on the ratio of lens diameter to lens focal length. This ratio is called the speed or "F-Value" of the lens. A speed of approximately f:2.3 to f:2.5 has been employed for several years as standard for high grade projection lenses.

The limit is set for lens diameter by the increasing difficulty of correcting aberration, but even if this were not the case, another consideration determines an effective limit. This is the difficulty of obtaining and maintaining sharp focus with lenses of too high speed. Such lenses require a very accurate and sensitive focusing adjustment, but, what is worse, because of the buckling of the film the picture seldom appears in focus for more than a few seconds, no matter what the adjustments may be.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

THE "sound movie" takes another forward step with the showing of "Glorious Betsy," now current on Broadway. The spoken sequences are generally effective; but the real high point of the picture is a ballroom scene which is climaxed by the singing of the "Marseillaise," rendered by Andre de Segurola, former opera star.

This is one of the natural sequences into which the "sound movie" can go with great effect. In fact, the big problem in the handling of sound is that of naturalness.

The picture itself is hokum, but of the box-office variety. It looks to us like a money-maker for the exhibitor, even without Vitaphone.

ONE of the most remarkable shots ever recorded by a news weekly is that in the Pathe News issue released Saturday, April 28, showing the wrecking of Lockhart's car at Daytona Beach, Florida, and the tragic manner in which this daring holder of many world's driving records was hurtled to his death. It is one of the most sensational flashes seen on a screen and the marvel of it is that a cameraman could have kept grinding while it was in progress. A full projection room gasped its horror with the realism of it when it was shown. Ray Hall, editor of Pathe News, declares it the most sensational shot he has seen in his twelve years of news reel experience.

Lockhart is first seen in a close-up at the start. He is then shown in his first trial spin in which he made 193 miles an hour. Then comes the dash in which he was making over 200 miles an hour when a blowout shot the car some twenty or thirty feet into the air. Not once, but five or six times the car turned completely over and on the last turn Lockhart was catapulted some seventy-five feet and at least thirty feet high. The mishap apparently took place immediately in front of the camera, for its every detail is clearly recorded.

Ray Murray Joins News' Coast Staff

THE West Coast staff of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, headed by William McCormack, has been augmented by the addition of J. Ray Murray, who recently resigned his post as Western Representative of the Exhibitor's Herald to assume duties in connection with his new affiliation.

Murray has enjoyed wide experience in the trade paper field, having been associated with this branch of the industry for more than fourteen years, during which time he served as Chicago correspondent for Film Daily, covered dramatic attractions in the windy city for Dramatic Mirror and later became editor of the motion picture department of Billboard, in New York. He then edited a fan magazine, but returned to the trade field when becoming associated with the Herald, where he has remained the past three years.

UNIVERSAL held the premiere of "The Man Who Laughs" at the Central Theatre, New York City, last week. The picture is being shown at top prices on a two-a-day schedule, and Universal has plans to roadshow it.

This Paul Leni production recalls the two other special productions Universal made from the Victor Hugo novels—"The Phantom of the Opera" and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." "The Man Who Laughs" is a more powerful picture than "The Phantom," and probably as good as the "Hunchback." Leni has duplicated his success with "The Cat and the Canary"—and more.

There are some who will say that "The Man Who Laughs" is too gruesome a story to be classed as good entertainment, but even they will never for a moment question the strength of the production. And then as to gruesomeness—one might answer that with the final check up on the box office for "The Phantom of the Opera," and further comment on the army of fans that turn out to greet each new Lon Chaney picture. Certainly, "The Phantom" was quite a bit gruesome.

* * * *

THE film gets away with a bang, which, of course, is a strong point. It ends with a "smash finish"—which is another strong point. There are some parts between that lag, but these easily could be speeded up. The film is shown in two parts, and is plenty long enough to stand a bit of cutting.

"The Man Who Laughs" must have cost Carl Laemmle a lot of money. The lavishness of the production and the length of time in its making will bear this out. But there is an excellent chance of Universal receiving a nice return on the investment.

work and reading matter which made up the formal season's announcement. His appetite for all the particulars has been whetted. When it is a matter of a sensational murder story in the daily paper, he knows that he can trust the wise editor to come out with a crackerjack "second day story," and then, if the facts warrant, to follow up with daily installments.

The same principle holds good with exhibitors in the case of the "first day" advertising story about new pictures, which is fascinating but necessarily lacking in detail. Here is where the home office will score heavily through its salesmen with a "second day" advertising story bringing out additional and alluring facts, and with as many additional "follow ups" as truth and ingenuity can supply.

No. When the general manager, or the division manager, or the district manager, or the branch manager complains that salesmen do not know how to cooperate with the firm's advertising, and won't learn, that probably is an excuse for a contemplated retrenchment in the advertising outlay suggested by some tired and overworked efficiency expert!

The popular Richard Dix, one of Paramount's best star bets, is well again. "Warming Up," the new picture he is making, will have the baseball diamond for a background. Mike Donlin (shown with Dix above) having made an indelible niche as a ball player, will be baseball technician

Scripts must be talked over many, many times. Director George Archainbaud and Ben Grauman Kohn debate the merits of scenes in "Ladies of the Night Club." The story, an original by Kohn, stars Ricardo Cortez. It is now being directed by Archainbaud for Tiffany-Stahl

He owes his rise to his own ability and their guidance. Not so long ago Nick Stuart was acting in Fox comedies. Now he is starring in Fox features, the latest, "The News Parade," directed by Dave Butler, left, and supervised by Truman Talley, right, chief of Fox News

Dorothy Devore plays a very elaborate harmonica, made of ivory and said to be exceptionally rare. It will eventually go to "Big Boy," in conjunction with whose pictures Educational stages harmonica contests

Paul Fejos, director, who recently scored an achievement in Zakoro's "The Last Moment." His latest is "Lonesome," for "U," with whom he is under contract

Buster Collier will be seen in 5 pictures from the Warner studio next season. At the present time he is working with Audrey Ferris in "No Questions Asked"

Several important "names" were signed for the leads in F B O's production in work, "The Perfect Crime." Irene Rich and Clive Brook are the two impassioned lovers. Gladys McConnell is also featured

Pretty Ann Page, M-G-M player opposite William Haines in "Telling the World," introduces her mother to the star and Director Sam Wood

Johnny Hines believes in doing things on a big scale, as witness his notebook and pencil. Before starting his new First National comedy Johnny takes some gag dictation from Dolores Del Rio, United Artists star

Courts to Determine Legality of Industry Practices

Department of Justice Files Two Petitions in Equity on Distribution, Arbitration and Credit

THE courts are to determine the legality of practices in the motion picture industry having to do with distribution, arbitration and credit. Two petitions in equity have been filed by the Department of Justice designed to test the legality of these practices. The defendants named are the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, the 32 Film Boards of Trade throughout the country and ten leading motion picture corporations. The suits are to be defended by the law firm of Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, who in a statement said their clients welcomed the opportunity to test the legality of the activities in dispute. C. C. Pettijohn, General Counsel for the Film Boards of Trade, in a statement also denied there had been any conspiracy in restraint of trade and defended the system of arbitration in vogue.

The firms named in the filing of the petition, in addition to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and the Film Boards of Trade are: Paramount Famous Players Lasky Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., United Artists Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Pathe Exchange, Inc., F. B. O. Pictures Corporation, Vitagraph, Inc., and Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. All members of all local Film Boards of Trade are also made defendants, although they are not named individually because of their great number.

The corporations named as defendants are alleged in the petition to distribute approximately 60 per cent of all the motion picture films distributed annually in the United States and that the members of the Film Boards of Trade are declared to represent the distributors of approximately 98 per cent of all such films.

Text of Announcement

Following is the full test of the department's announcement:

It is announced at the Department of Justice that two petitions in equity were filed, April 27, in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York. There are three classes of defendants to these actions. The first class comprises ten defendant corporations which are engaged in distributing motion picture films throughout the United States, namely:

Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., United Artists Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Pathe Exchange, Inc., F. B. O. Pictures Corporation, Vitagraph, Inc., Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., an association of which all the defendant distributors are members, is named as a defendant next after the defendant distributors.

The third class of defendants includes the 32 Film Boards of Trade located in the principal distributing centers for motion picture films throughout the United States. All the members of each local Film Board of Trade are made defendants to those actions although such members are so numerous that they are not named individually.

Both petitions allege that the defendant corporations distribute approximately 60 per cent of all the motion picture film distributed annually in the United States and that the members of Film Boards of Trade represent the distributors of approximately 98 per cent of all such motion picture films.

In August, 1926, the Department announced that it had completed its investigation of the Film Boards of Trade. Certain practices which had been adopted by the local boards were objected to by the Department and at its instance the Film Boards of Trade amplified the rules and regulations relating to arbitration, so as clearly to prohibit members of local boards from pursuing such objectionable practices. The operations of the credit committees of the Film Boards of Trade were not covered by the first investigation by the Department.

Found Arbitration Fair

Because, from its inquiry, the Department found that the arbitration system constituted a fair, just and economical method of dealing with the disputes between exhibitors and distributors, it was decided at that time not to institute proceedings to test the legality of the system, but rather to observe its operations, effect, and practical workings.

In January, 1927, the Department instituted a thorough and comprehensive investigation into practically every phase of the motion picture industry. This investigation is still being pursued vigorously, but due to the fact that it has covered a very large field, it has required minute study of detailed data and information. Progress of the work has been delayed also by careful investigation of all complaints received by the Department.

Frequently such investigation has resulted only in loss of time, because the complaints themselves have too often been founded on rumors unsupported by evidence and as a result have been misleading. As the work progressed and as illegalities have been disclosed, the Department decided without delay to submit to the Court the determination of specific questions, so that stability and certainty could be established in the industry.

It is a result of this investigation and the plan outlined that the present actions have been instituted. These actions are two in number. The first is entitled United States v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation et al. It is brought to test the legality of the agreement between the distributors of motion picture films to contract with exhibitors for the exhibition of motion pictures by contracts which contain all the terms and provisions of a standard exhibition contract and more particularly a provision for the arbitration of all disputes arising between exhibitors and distributors under such contracts, and to test the legality of the rules and regulations which have been established and operated by the Film Boards of Trade for enforcing awards of the Boards of Arbitration.

The second action is entitled United States v. First National Pictures, Inc., et al. The purpose of this action is to test the legality of the operations of the credit committees of the Film Boards of Trade. It is alleged in the petition that the purpose and function of these credit committees is to compel every one acquiring a motion picture theatre by transfer or purchase to take over and to perform all uncompleted contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures at such theatres which had been entered into by the previous owners or operators of the theatres.

Charge Boards Failed to Act

It is also alleged that many local film boards still operate with the practices which they were instructed to discontinue as a result of the original investigation. In order to prevent the members of the film boards from continuing such illegal practices, it is essential to secure a decree which under penalty will enjoin them from such continuance.

Another reason for testing out the working of the arbitration system is to have the legality of rules and regulations for enforcing the awards of the Board of Arbitration. This is particularly important because of similar questions in other industries. Here we have presented a question as to whether or not substantially all the distributors of motion picture films may agree to require security from any exhibitor who has failed to comply with an award of the Board of Arbitration and to suspend service to such an exhibitor until and unless he complies with the award or makes the deposit.

Concerning the second action it is the contention of the Department that distributors of motion picture films can not agree amongst themselves as to the terms and conditions under which they will enter into contracts with the new owners or operators of motion picture theatres. It is asserted by the Department that the system as operated does not pertain to credit as is usually understood and does not purport to furnish information on the basis of which each member of each film board individually may decide for himself whether any new owner of a theatre is a suitable credit risk with whom to do business.

Statement from Attorneys

The following statement was issued by Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, attorneys for all of the defendants named in the actions brought by the Government against Motion Picture Distributors and the Film Boards of Trade:

"Our clients welcome the opportunity to test the legality of the Film Boards of Trade arbitration plan, which we are informed has been the small exhibitor's greatest single protection during the growth of the motion picture industry and which its sponsors regard as the outstanding contribution by any group toward the development of industrial arbitration in the United States.

"The plan has been overwhelmingly satisfactory inside the industry. Under its provisions over 50,000 cases have been amicably settled, without litigation, during the past five years. Resultant confidence between seller and buyer has freed the small exhibitor from the former onerous necessity of posting large cash advances to lease films.

"The arbitration plan, as successfully practiced since 1923, was approved before its adoption by us.

"We have entered an appearance for all the defendants. Mr. George W. Wickersham, formerly Attorney General of the United States, will direct the defense jointly with Mr. Edwin P. Grosvenor, a member of our firm, who, for many years, was Special Assistant Attorney General in charge of cases under the Sherman Anti-trust Act.

"As we understand it, the question at issue in one suit is the legality of the arbitration plan adopted by the industry and also whether members of the Film Boards of Trade have been operating strictly within the plan as set up. In the other suit the question is the legality of the credit rules, the purpose of which is to obtain information regarding transfers of theatres in total disregard of existing contracts, and to afford reasonable protection to distributors against fraudulent transfers of theatres.

"The industry has furnished the Department of Justice every facility during its investigation. Its agents have been accorded free access to the files of the Film Boards and their members throughout the country and have taken whatever they wished.

"We shall cooperate with the Department in an effort to obtain an early trial of the cases."

Pettijohn Denies Conspiracy

The statement from C. C. Pettijohn, General Counsel of the Film Boards of Trade, follows:

"We know there has been no conspiracy and no restraint of trade. The Film Boards of Trade stand ready to fit their policies cheerfully to any ruling of the courts of the land. Arbitration, in one form or another, is the modern and proper trend. To abandon it would be to slide back toward the dark ages of business.

"Major capital for the conduct of the motion picture industry, including all experimentation and improvement of the product, must inevitably be furnished by the producing companies. The average picture usually takes three months from the beginning of production to completion, and it is another two years before return of capital expended, and problematical profit, accrues to the producer.

"This means, in effect, that the producer puts up vast sums on the promises-to-buy comprised in his sales contracts with exhibitors, large and small, throughout the country. Such pictures as Old Ironsides, Ben-Hur, The Hunchback of Notre Dame, the delightful Barrie stories and Wings could never be attempted unless the producer had reasonable assurance that executed contracts would be fulfilled in good faith.

"Before the present arbitration system was put into effect five years ago, the situation was met by requiring the exhibitor to put up a considerable portion of the rental charge in advance. This was a great hardship to the small theatre owner, and arbitration has happily ended its necessity.

"Today exhibitor and producer agree, as a basic part of their leasing agreement, to submit to a board of arbitration, half of whose members shall be exhibitors, any dispute which may come up between them. In the rare cases where these boards, composed of six members, fail to reach a decision, a seventh is chosen by them or appointed by the American Arbitration Association.

"The plan is extremely simple, and in practice has exceeded the most optimistic hopes of its proposers. In 1927, 14,356 claims were adjudicated by this method and only sixty-two out of this great number were carried by either side to courts of law.

"The obvious value to a producer in knowing that contracts will be kept without the necessity of long legal fights is equalled, if not exceeded by the protection to the small exhibitor. Formerly, he might think he had a prior right, under his contract, to a certain film. He could sue about it. By the time the suit was settled, his rival would long since have shown the picture and its value as a drawing card would have been extinguished by time and the onward march of the art. A motion picture has box office value, except the rare classics, only during and immediately following the promotional period. Today, the exhibitor can appeal to his board of arbitration and get a decision within two weeks at most. The distributor cannot close with a rival theatre owner until the board makes an award.

Complaints Under Arbitration

"The particular complaint discussed above is known in the trade as a 'violation of run.' Other complaints which the exhibitor has the right to take before an arbitration board for prompt award include:

"'Miss-outs,' or failure to deliver pictures on time.

"'Violation of Protection,' or the showing of a film in the exhibitor's immediate territory before a specified time limit.

"Substitution of one picture for another which was contracted for. The exhibitor may appeal to an arbitration board for release of all obligation to show the substituted picture.

"Ambiguities in contract. Any point which may seem not clear to the exhibitor at any time may be submitted to an arbitration board for immediate definition.

"There is fierce and unremitting competition, all year round, and year after year, between the companies which the Government has attacked, under the so-called anti-trust law. Every great producer has his own salesmen in the field, in number, and the desire to settle peaceably any difference with a customer is based on lively self-interest. If the exhibitor feels that one producer has not given him the fullest of fair play, he has a dozen other companies clamoring for his trade. That is why in 1927 4,671 cases between exhibitors and producers that were submitted to arbitration boards were settled before they came up for hearing. When men in disagreement can be brought to talk together, and when each is a factor in the other's prosperity, amicable adjustment almost invariably follows and is infinitely preferable to lawsuits.

"This principle of arbitration is one of the most important developments in American economic and social life, and its application in the motion picture industry is more complete and more demonstratedly successful than in any other field. It is a pity, from the psychological standpoint, that the Government has had to seem to attack the principle itself. We believe the net result will be a mere defining by the court of how far concerted agreements to arbitrate can go under our present federal laws."

Will Campaign Against Non-Theatrical Groups

THEATRE owners of the northwest are expected to launch a vigorous campaign against the showing of films for profit by non-theatrical groups following the issuance of an injunction by Judge B. F. Wright of the Hubbard county district court against the independent school district of Park Rapids, Minn., prohibiting it from conducting motion picture shows in the school auditorium building. The request for the injunction was sought by Harry W. Ressler, a picture theatre owner of Park Rapids. The injunction was granted on the ground that a governmental organization was entered a private business. Al Steffes, president of the Northwest Theatre Owners, this week said that papers were being prepared against the school board of Spring Grove, Minn., in an attempt to stop it from giving picture shows in its high school auditorium.

Ruth Roland May Return to Picture Making

Ruth Roland, who has done practically no screen work for several years may return to the screen, it is said. The erstwhile serial queen is reported to have been consulting with Jesse J. Goldburg, president of First Division Distributors, Inc., about making her own productions for release through the Goldburg company. The deal is in the negotiating stage.

In and Out of Town

FLORENCE VIDOR, who will arrive in New York on Saturday, May 5th, has decided to stop off for a week while on her way to Europe. She plans to sail May 12th.

MONTE Blue will arrive in New York with Mrs. Blue on May 3rd. He will stay in the city for about two days before embarking for Europe on the S. S. La France on May 5th. His vacation trip abroad will last for two months, bringing him back to Hollywood early in June to begin his new pictures for Warner Brothers.

AFTER a sales trip to Boston, Chicago and Detroit in closing up territory for next season's product, Jesse J. Goldburg, president of First Division, has returned to New York.

EVELYN BRENT, having finished work on Paramount's "The Drag Net" with George Bancroft, left Hollywood on Monday for two weeks of vacationing in New York.

JOSEF VON STERNBERG, Paramount director, arrived in New York last Sunday for a short visit in connection with George Bancroft's next picture, which, if present plans materialize, will have a New York background. He attended Paramount convention in Washington. Jules Furthman will join Von Sternberg here within a few days.

SAM SAX, president of Gotham, leaves Tuesday for Hollywood, where he will immediately complete arrangements for the 1928-29 season.

Hays in Conference With French Commission

Woodhull Criticizes Sapiro for Cable Forwarded to Herriot, Minister of Education

By L. C. MOEN

Staff Correspondent, Motion Picture News

PARIS, May 3.—Will H. Hays, head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was in attendance today at a conference with the Cinema Commission specially called by Edouard Herriot, Minister of Education, in an effort to bring about a solution of the quota problem.

This meeting was the result of a conference Hays had with Herriot on Tuesday. Mr. Hays, seemingly unable to get little satisfaction from the Cinema Commission, had booked passage on the Majestic, sailing Wednesday, but after a talk with Minister Herriot, Tuesday, it was decided to bring the Commission together Thursday for a complete discussion of all details with Mr. Hays.

In the meantime the American companies have proceeded with their plan for a shutdown, which it seems will go into effect at once unless satisfactory arrangements can be made with the Commission. The American companies have already started a reduction in their staffs, and will withdraw from France unless the present law is modified. All trade showings have been cancelled.

The outcome of Thursday's conference in Paris between Will H. Hays and the French Cinema Commission is being eagerly waited in America by all branches of the industry. Producers and distributors have been vitally interested since the French quota law was first announced. Now the exhibitors have entered into the argument.

There is considerable difference of opinion between Aaron Sapiro, president of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors, Inc., of New York, and R. F. Woodhull, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, as to the attitude that should be taken by Will H. Hays in France.

On Tuesday, Mr. Sapiro directed a cable to Edouard Herriot, Minister of Education, in which he informed him, in effect, that American exhibitors were not interested in production and distribution problems in France, and that Mr. Hays was not in any way representing the independent theatre owners of America; that the independent theatre owners were willing to book French or any other foreign product providing it was up to the American standard.

Mr. Woodhull takes exception to the Sapiro cable in the following statement:

"The questions involved in the conference now going on in France between Will Hays, representing American producers and distributors, are production and distribution problems, and have so been regarded generally by theatre owners throughout the United States. I read the reported statement of Mr. Sapiro in his telegram to Mr. Herriot this morning. It is obvious that this telegram was not sent to help the American production and distribution problems abroad as represented by Mr. Hays in his negotiations on behalf of the industry. There are more than 20,000 theatres in the United States. Mr. Sapiro represents a buying organization of less than 100 theatres in the City of New York. That he should undertake, even inferentially, to speak for all theatre owners in the United States with reference to their attitude towards negotiations in France, without knowledge of what is actually happening from day to day is not clear to me.

"Theatre owners in America have not made money on foreign-made film. The real attitude of the American theatre owner can be stated as follows:

"No theatre owner cares where the picture is made, or where it comes from, so long as it is a good picture, pleases his public and makes money for him at his box-office. Past experience has demonstrated that in rare instances only have foreign-made pictures been suitable to the American market and profitable to the theatre owner.

"If American distributors are forced to buy these pictures and lay them on the shelf, this loss would undoubtedly be loaded on to rental charges to exhibitors for American pictures. On the other hand, should the foreign market for American pictures or any considerable portion of them be cut off, this loss of revenue over there would be absorbed in the increased price paid for American pictures by the theatre owners of the United States or provided for by the cheapening of American product to absorb this loss."

Penn Censors Win Over Speaking Devices

THE Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censors came out ahead in the first court skirmish when Judge Alessandroni, in the Court of Common Pleas, in Philadelphia, on April 26, refused to grant a preliminary injunction sought by Vitagraph, Inc., to prevent the board from censoring language used by speaking devices in connection with the showing of motion pictures.

Vitagraph, to test its legal rights, refused to submit the words of "Polly Moran," a motion picture, to the censors. The board sent out notices that after April 16 all spoken motion pictures would have to be passed upon. The company refused and started the court action, contending the board arbitrarily was "extending its power of censorship."

Morris Wolf, counsel for Vitagraph, said after the court ruling, that negotiations would be begun with the censors in an effort to reach an agreement. Judge Alessandroni continued the case.

Brookhart Bill Action Abandoned for Present Congress Session

NO action will be taken on the Brookhart Bill at this session of Congress. Senator Brookhart, author of the measure, has abandoned hope of having the measure taken up because of the short time that remains before adjournment.

Senator Watson, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, is engaged in campaigning in Indiana, and will not return to Washington before about May 10, Senator Brookhart said this week. It will be virtually impossible, he added, to secure action before Congress adjourns. The session will close early in June.

Senator Brookhart will seek to have a report made by the Committee on the measure when Congress meets in December.

Government Notables at Paramount Dinner

Dawes, Hoover, Wilbur, and Robinson Guests; Otto Kahn, Presides as Toastmaster

WITH a group of notable Government officials as speakers and guests of honor, the Washington sales convention of Paramount was featured by a banquet at the Carlton Hotel, May 2. Otto H. Kahn, banker and art patron, was toastmaster and chief speaker.

Other speakers were Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce; Curtis D. Wilbur, Secretary of the Navy; Senator Joseph Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic leader of the Senate; S. R. Kent, Paramount general manager; and Adolph Zukor, President of the Corporation.

Vice-President Dawes was a guest. The speeches were broadcast by Station WMAL.

Commander Richard E. Byrd, who was also to have been a guest, sent his regrets. He is not making public appearances at this time because of bereavement over the death of Floyd Bennett.

An important development was the reference in Byrd's letter to his satisfaction over the arrangement made with Paramount, by which the pictorial record of the Byrd Expedition to the South Pole will be made exclusively by Paramount News cameramen.

All the Government officials paid high tribute to the progress of the industry, Mr. Wilbur referring to the place of the motion picture in maintaining morale and providing entertainment for men of the Navy; Mr. Hoover stressing the role of the film internationally; and Senator Robinson making an important declaration on "Self-Government in Industry," in which he discussed Governmental regulation of private business.

"The movie," said Mr. Kahn, who was presiding officer as well as principal speaker at the banquet, "has opened up for the plain people, and, indeed, for people of all stations, new worlds of knowledge, interest and variety. It has taken the average man and woman beyond the confines of local experience to reveal to them the wonders and infinite potentialities of the greater world. It has been a great liberating force both for the minds and emotions of the people. In its essence and, I hope, and believe, in its ultimate practical development, the movie is a fifty-fifty dualism of business and art."

"I believe that this phase is passed, and a new era is dawning. The financial position of the leading concerns is now secure beyond peradventure. The credit facilities at their disposal are ample. Their securities have a ready market. The public taste has advanced and become more discriminating.

"Mushy sentimentality and flamboyant captions have lost much of their vogue. Producers are finding out that the alleged necessity of playing down to an assumed level of fatuity on the part of the audience is a bogey, that in this as in other matters the instinct and tendency of the people are to recognize the worth while thing and to prefer it to the shoddy.

"It is astonishing," he declared, "to see how much young talent is trooping to the colors of the movies. The vast bulk of it is composed of American-born, proving once more what I have long claimed—that in this vast country is all the raw material of great cultural and artistic achievement."

The Washington convention of Paramount opened this week at the Carlton Hotel, with between 200 and 300 officials and executives of Paramount and Publix in attendance and with Sidney R. Kent presiding. The executive group will continue at the conclusion of the Washington sessions to Detroit and San Francisco, where other conventions are to be held.

Production and distribution executives who attended the Washington sessions are: Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, S. R. Kent, Ralph Kohn, Walter Wanger, B. P. Schulberg, C. J. Schaefer, J. D. Clark, John Hammell, M. H. Lewis, Henry Salsbury, Charles E. McCarthy, Russell Holman, John Butler, F. E. Meyer, L. Bamberger, C. B. J. Frawley and A. O. Dillenbeck, of the Hanff Metzger Advertising Agency.

Publix officials attending are: Sam Katz, Sam Dembow, E. J. Zukor and A. M. Botsford.

From the Paramount foreign department: E. E. Shauer, M. A. Shauer, J. H. Seidelman, Dick Blumenthal, Geo. Weltner, Albert Deane, O. R. Geyer, located in the home office, and Tom D. Cochrane, A. Abouf, H. Novak, John Day and A. Pratchett from the foreign field.

The Paramount short feature department is represented by Emanuel Cohen, Stanley Waite and Miles F. Gibbons.

Motion picture exports for February reached the lowest value touched in a number of months with a total of 21,695,625 feet, valued at $595,895, against 24,811,794 feet, valued at $727,188 in January, according to figures just compiled by the United States Department of Commerce in Washington, D. Bandits Slay Girl Usher in Chicago Suburb Theatre

MASKED bandits shot and killed a sixteen year old girl usher during a daring hold-up at the Ritz motion picture theatre, Berwyn, a suburb of Chicago, and then escaped with $1,400. The theatre is operated by Biba Brothers. The robbery occurred during the showing of the feature picture and the audience of two thousand was panic stricken as the sounds of shots echoed through the theatre.

Many rushed out into the lobby but the three robbers who were armed with shotguns and revolvers, fired over the heads of the crowd, intimidating the people and made their escape in an automobile, which was driven by a fourth member of the gang. Miss Pearl Eggleston of the Oak Park was the slain girl. She was temporarily in the cashier's cage assisting Miss Gertrude Plant, the cashier, who was counting the receipts.

Suddenly three young men, wearing neat half masks stood before the girls and commanded hands up. Accounts of what followed vary, but it is believed that one of the robbers shot down Miss Eggleston without any warning. Unperturbed by his killing, the bandit stepped over his victim's body and strode into the cage where he calmly collected the paper currency, taking care to get it all. The silver he scorned. Another of the gang had held Ernest Stelzer, the ticket taker, at bay with a shot gun. James Biba, one of the owners, arrived just as the robbers' car raced eastward towards Chicago, and had the unfortunate victim of the robber's gun rushed to the Oak Park Hospital, but she was pronounced dead on the way.

Will Convene in Canada

Educational Sets Annual Sessions for Montreal from May 22 to May 24, Inclusive

FOR the first time a big American film concern will hold its annual sales convention in the Dominion of Canada, when Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., executives and branch managers meet in Montreal in a three-day session, starting Tuesday, May 22, and continuing through Thursday, May 24. Headquarters will be at the Mount Royal Hotel, where all the business meetings will be conducted.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, will greet the branch managers from all of Educational's thirty-six exchanges in the United States and Canada when he calls the first meeting to order on the morning of May 22.

One of the most interesting announcements Mr. Hammons will have to make at the first session of the convention will be detailed plans for at least two new series of pictures for distribution in the season of 1928-1929.

Oscar Hanson, Canadian general manager for Educational, and his group of six branch managers, will greet the home office delegation to the convention and the managers and salesmen from branches in the United States. The executives from the home office who will accompany Mr. Hammons to Montreal include A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager; J. R. Wilson, domestic sales manager; Gordon S. White, director of advertising and publicity, and Harvey Day, Kinograms sales manager. Others in the party will include Capt. G. McL. Baynes, head of the Kinogram Publishing Corporation, and several of Educational's special representatives, among them being Arthur Lucas, of Atlanta, Southern representative, and Jack Skirball, of Ohio.

Montreal was selected as the location for Educational's 1928 convention when a number of most cordial invitations to meet there were received by Mr. Hammons from Canadian officials during the progress of Educational's meeting at Los Angeles last year. These invitations came from Mackensie King, Premier of Canada; L. A. Taschereau, Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec; Mederic Martin, Mayor of Montreal, and several other officials, as well as a number of Canadian exhibitors.

Magazine Stories Bought for Columbia Production

Columbia has made three more additions to its line-up of story material for the season of 1928-29, with the acquisition of screening rights to "Trial Marriage," "The Power of the Press," and "Sinners' Parade."

"Trial Marriage," by Elizabeth Alexander, ran serially in "The Saturday Evening Post." "The Power of the Press," by Frederick A. Thompson, appeared as a short story in McClure's. "Sinners' Parade," from the pen of David Lewis, will be published in one of the national magazines in the fall.

Revenue Revision Bill to Exempt Admissions to $3

ADMISSIONS not exceeding $3 are to be exempt from all tax, under the revenue revision bill reported this week to the Senate by the Senate Finance Committee. Refusing to accept the increase from 75 cents to $1, recommended by the Treasury and included in the revenue bill passed by the House of Representatives December 15, last, the republicans on the committee also refused to acceed to a demand of the democrats that the admission tax be wiped off the books in its entirety, and by a party vote of 11 to 9 succeeded in putting their $3 exemption through.

The democratic fight will be directed chiefly at the corporation tax, which, under the bill as brought through by the majority, is to be reduced from 13½ to 12½ per cent. The bill as passed by the House calls for a reduction to 11½ per cent, and the democrats in the Senate are demanding that the House rate be accepted. The republicans also increased the exemption of corporations from $2,000 to $3,000 but refused to accept the sliding scale of tax for corporations with net income not exceeding $15,000. Surtaxes were also revised on incomes between $18,000 and $70,000 and this revision was made applicable to 1927 income, which will mean a return of some $25,000,000 to individual taxpayers.

It is planned to take the bill up May 3, with probabilities that it will be passed before May 12.

Atlanta Board Votes to Reinstate T. A. Branon

At its regular meeting April 23, the Atlanta Film Board of Trade voted to reinstate Thomas A. Branon, president of Eltabran Film Company, with headquarters in Atlanta, to membership in the Board in full standing. Just what effect this action will have on the injunction suit filed against the film board by Mr. Branon the latter part of March is not known, as a hearing in the case has not been held.

At the time the suit was brought in Fulton Superior Court, Judge Verilyn Moore signed a temporary restraining order, and set April 14 as the date for a hearing. Later, it is understood, the case was continued at the request of attorneys representing the film board.

When seen this week, after the Board had voted to reinstate him to membership, Mr. Branon declined to make any statement, other than to say that, in view of the fact that no hearing in the court case had been held, he deemed it improper for him to make any comment.

$500,000 Suit on Disc Record Patents

Talking picture patents wherein disc records are used for synchronizing sound with pictures are the subject of a suit for a half million dollars instituted by Earle W. Jones against Max Ettinger, Harrison W. Rogers, Inc., and Harrison W. Rogers. Jones alleges that Harrison W. Rogers, Inc., and Harrison W. Rogers entered into a contract with him whereby they agreed to convey all of their twenty patent rights to him for a certain stipulated sum.

It is alleged by Jones that while his agreement was pending the Rogers concern and Rogers sold these patents to Ettinger and refused to turn them over to Jones, thereby interfering with a number of contracts Jones had entered into with film companies, and depriving him of a million dollars in profit.

George W. Erdmann, secretary of the association has asked members not even to talk about films with any exchange until the word goes forth from the protection committee. The protection committee is calling on each exchange in an effort to secure reasonable protection. It is claimed that in no other territory in the country is such extended protection granted as in Cleveland.

Richard Dix will appear in two specials and three starring pictures. First of the specials is "Redskin," a picture of "The Vanishing American" type. "Unconquered," will be the second, and in this picture will be featured Florence Vidor. Two Dix starring pictures have been selected, "Warming Up," a baseball story, and "Moran of the Marines."

Higher Admissions Are Seen As Possible Outcome by Ohio Exhibitors

AS the outcome of present selling methods, higher admissions are seen, according to representatives of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitor's Association. These views were expressed by exhibitors at a meeting of the Federated Women's Clubs, held last week in Cleveland. The exhibitor-speakers take exception to recent remarks on block booking by Carl E. Milliken.

These points in refutation of Governor Milliken's remarks were made by Geo. W. Erdmann and M. B. Horwitz. Gov. Milliken had stated that block blind booking was like buying a subscription to a magazine. The exhibitors contended that a magazine went to everybody simultaneously, that it is purchased to please only the buyer and that a subscription is a convenience to the subscriber rather than a money saver.

Dooley Extends Contract With Christies

Billy Dooley, comedian in Christie Comedies, has extended his contract with the company for a long period and is definitely set to star in a series of eight comedies during the coming season. Dooley has just finished his second year in motion pictures, having completed work in his last two comedies.

Kaufman Now Lasky's Aide in Production

ON the eve of his departure last Sunday for a company convention in Washington, Jesse L. Lasky, announced the appointment of Albert A. Kaufman, at present director of Paramount theatres in Europe, to be his assistant in the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation production department.

Mr. Kaufman has been long in the employ of the Paramount organization. He was manager of Paramount's Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles. After a short period in Los Angeles he was sent to London to build and open the Plaza Theatre there. Later he assumed charge of all Paramount houses in Europe.

After attending the three Paramount Lasky conventions, Mr. Lasky will join Mr. Kaufman in Paris to make a survey of European production activities.

Producer-Owner Blamed for Film Inferiority

Tumble in the quality of pictures was blamed on producer-owned theatres by Charles Metzger, Mecca Theatre owner and state exhibitor president, before Indiana convention at the Claypool hotel, Indianapolis. Metzger declared the practice of producers operating their own houses was the "greatest mistake in the motion picture industry." Mrs. Davis Ross was re-elected president of the Indianapolis branch of indorsers.

The following resolution was passed.

"Whereas, There are three distinct groups for which pictures should be emphasized, church, school and theatre.

"Whereas, The school picture is to teach and emphasize the fundamental of all classroom subjects, only such pictures should be in use in schools which pertain to these topics.

"Whereas, The functions of the church are to teach and emphasize the spiritual side of life the church should only show such pictures as pertain to this phase of life.

"Whereas, The theatre is our place for recreation the theatre should show pictures especially for entertaining purposes. Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That these three distinct groups of pictures in churches, schools and theatres be observed. Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays support and promote these three distinct groups."

New Schedule Announced by M-G-M ing the coming season of 1928-29.

Declaring that all the leading picture companies have now developed their studio facilities to a point where the general average of product is higher than ever bfore, Mr. Schenck said that a high production standard is made necessary by the unprecedented popularity of motion pictures and the demand of the public for consistently good films.

During the past year, he pointed out, attendance records in virtually every key city theatre were shattered in playing some of the outstanding productions of 1927-28.

Felix F. Feist, sales manager for M-G-M, presided at both the Eastern regional convention, held at the Hotel William Penn, Pittsburgh, April 27-28, and at the Western gathering, sessions of which took place at the Hotel Baltimore, in Kansas City, on April 30 and May 1.

The roster of home office executives attending the two conventions is as follows: Felix F. Feist, General Sales Manager; Paul Burger, Sales Development Mgr.; Fred C. Quimby, Short Subject Sales Mgr.; Howard Dietz, Director of Advertising, Publicity and Exploitation, and Allin Cummings, Exchange Operations Mgr.

New Stanley House to Go Up in West Philly

THE Mercantile and Theatres Properties, Inc., has entered into a long-term lease with the Stanley Company of America and has agreed to erect at the southeast corner of 52nd and Chestnut, Phila., a theatre which will represent an investment close to $2,000,000 and compare favorably with the present Stanley at Nineteenth and Market Streets. It is expected that the building operations will begin within 30 days and that the house will be completed for the season of 1929.

Negotiations for the Stanley Company were brought to a conclusion by Mastbaum Bros. and Fleisher. Joseph Bernhard represented Mercantile and Theatres Properties. The property was acquired some years ago by the Stanley organization. The lot is 117 by 227 feet. A seating capacity of 4,000 is assured. The architect is Ralph B. Bencker of Philadelphia.

Key City Reports

New York City

A GLOOMY, rainy Saturday, Sunday and Monday cut heavily into Broadway theatre attendance last week and practically every house along the Row shared in the bad news. And to make matters still worse there's a good, stiff fight on among the leaders right at this time in the matter of gathering the loose coin around town. The only boys who are having an easy time of it are those working the theatre crowds with the fake 25c watches and it must make many a showman sad to see the way the customers fight to secure a timepiece without any works—and right under the eyes of Mr. Warren's watchdogs, too.

Any other week the Paramount would have hit its usual stride with Pola Negri in "Three Sinners" and no doubt the weather was responsible for a slight decrease. A fair week, anyway. Fox's Roxy slid into one of the worst weeks the big 6,200 seater has had since it opened in spite of the fine Rothafel presentation which accompanied "The Play Girl" (Fox). Or, as regards the picture, it may be that the public is getting wised up to the fact that a large number of mere program films are being used as first run attractions, bolstered with strong presentations. At least, the local newspapers have harped on this subject long enough to instill some such thought in the minds of the customers.

Very favorable comment greeted Marion Davies in "The Patsy" at the Capitol, several critics stating that this picture was one of the comedy hits of the season. However, the newspaper boys did not help overcome the prevailing conditions as returns were just fair. The depression was also felt at the Strand where Milton Sills' picture, "Burning Daylight," brought that house a below average week's trade. The Griffith film, "Drums of Love," came into the Rialto and gave that house very fair business after doing about the same pace when it played the Liberty at top prices. The other Publix-U. A. house, the Rivoli, brought Harold Lloyd's "Speedy" another week of pretty fair business but hardly consistent with the strong pace set the first week.

Two newcomers invaded the ranks of the specials last week when "The Man Who Laughs" (U) came into the Central and "Glorious Betsy" premiered at Warners. The former, taken from the Victor Hugo story, has apparently gotten off to a very good start. There can be no doubt but that Hugo has been widely read. This was proven some time ago when "Les Miserables" was on the street. The Leni production is rated as a strong but gruesome one. As the home of most Vitaphone pictures, Warners' theatre has come into a rather steady trade from those who like "talkie" films and the new Costello-Nagel picture did a pretty good business for a wet week-end.

At the Astor, "The Trail of '98" is still pulling steady trade and the same can be said for "Wings" at the Criterion. Plenty of activity around both these houses. The 44th Street, with "Abie's Irish Rose," has received a bad break on many things attending its recent premiere and has still to show just what it will do as one of the $2 attractions. Everyone concedes that it will go great as a regular release but some doubt its worth as a special. The Embassy, where "Two Lovers" has been for the past several weeks, also felt a slight depression the past week.

Fox's line up along Broadway continues to be led by "Street Angel" at the Globe and "Four Sons" at the Gaiety, both showing good returns. "Mother Machree" is not doing as well at the Times Square.

Off Broadway, the Hippodrome with a popular priced show which included an excellent comedy drama "The Matinee Idol" (Columbia) and the regular K-A vaudeville, did another profitable week's business. The Cameo, with "A Woman Tempted" (Aywon) did below average.

Minneapolis

SPRING weather descended on Minneapolis with a vengeance last week, and of course the result was to cut into theatre attendance here and there. The new Minnesota kept up a fast pace at the box office, and this in spite of the fact that the house is rapidly ceasing to become a novelty. The picture attraction was Adolphe Menjou in "A Night of Mystery" and the stage attraction was the Publix Unit show, "The Fast Mail," produced by Frank Cambria.

"Ramona," at the State, did an exceptionally good business, measuring up in good style to the standard of "Speedy," which preceded it the week before. The State suffered quite a bit as the result of competition from the Minnesota at first, but a good run of pictures is gradually helping to bring the crowds back. Gilda Gray, at the Strand, made a nice showing, and Reginald Denny's comedy, "That's My Daddy," pleased good crowds at the Lyric.

Neither Pantages or the Hennepin-Orpheum had much to brag about in the way of pictures, the former showing Madge Bellamy in "The Play Girl' and the latter Sally O'Neil in "Becky." Buck Jones, in "The Branded Sombrero," was a good program attraction at the Seventh Street. Clara Bow came into the Grand for a second run in "Red Hair" and seemed to please the crowds.

The Lagoon, a neighborhood house, showed "Legion of the Condemned" and made a very good showing with it, but some of the other outlying houses found business only fair.

The movies had very little in the way of competition this week, most of it being provided by the Shubert, which was offering Lillian Foster in "Bless You, Sister."

Atlanta

DESPITE metropolitan opera holding forth in splendid gala and a first class stock company drawing laurels, Atlanta moving pictures enjoyed a good week, offering a varied bill-of-fare.

"Ramona," at the Howard, drew well. Too, it being Ray Teal's farewell week, plus an unusually fine presentation, the Howard's box-office struck a high mark.

Next door, Ramon Novarro brought Loew's Grand a substantial net in his latest, "Across to Singapore."

The Capitol had another sure-hit Fox opus, "Silk Legs," which, as Fox numbers usually do, went over big.

Keith's Georgia did not lag behind with Bebe Daniels in "Feel My Pulse." This was the comedy hit of the week.

At the Metropolitan, Milton Sills, in "The Valley of the Giants," drew well.

Buffalo

NORMAL business prevailed last week in Buffalo theatres, and box office records were not threatened, although some of the houses, notably Loew's State, closely approached record-breaking proportions. Douglas Fairbanks, in "The Gaucho," was not a world-beater by any means at Shea's Buffalo, although he kept the public coming through the entrance doors in goodly numbers. The picture lacked the action appeal for children that his previous efforts abounded in. "Gallopin' On," the stage presentation, went over nicely, due in large measure to the appearance in the cast of Agnes Helliwell, who used to be a sheet music clerk here until a theatrical contest got her a chance behind the footlights.

A fair run of business came the way of Shea's Hippodrome, where the screen feature starred "The Covered Wagon Girl," Lois Wilson, with "Mixed Pickles," a C. B. Maddox revue, occupying the vaudeville spotlight. The Great Lakes chalked up a nice week's receipts with "That's My Daddy," as the cinema attraction, and a superb vaudeville program headlined by Kitty Doner, the well-known male impersonator.

The film, "Across to Singapore,' started off with a bang at Loew's State, along with an excellent stage bill featuring Buck and Babbles, negro entertainers, but toward the middle of the week the patronage sagged, only to pick up like a whirlwind in the last few days. Loew's State recorded receipts during the week which, in proportion, probably exceeded those of any other house in town. The Lafayette had a very good week, also, with "Ham and Eggs at the Front" on the screen, and Nonette, singing violinist, heading the vaudeville section of the bill.

Harold Lloyd returned for a week's showing of "Speedy" at Shea's Kensington, a neighborhood house, and packed the theatregoers in every night.

Los Angeles

THEATRE business was generally good throughout the city the past week, despite the fact a new theatre was opened and was bidding strongly for the trade. Warner Bros. opened their new theatre in Hollywood and through advertising and exploitation in connection with the opening, theatre business was generally stimulated.

At the new Warner theatre, "Glorious Betsy" is showing at popular prices and doing very good business. At the United Artists theatre Corinne Griffith, in "The Garden of Eden," played to satisfactory attendance.

Grauman's Chinese closed a successful run of "The Circus." "The Trail of '98" moves in next week. "Street Angel," at the Carthay Circle, is doing very well. This theatre has just changed its policy and is featuring the Movietone instead of prologues. The management reports the new line-up of entertainment has reacted favorably with the public.

"Wings" is still drawing at the Biltmore, but is advertised to close in two weeks. At the Million Dollar, Harold Lloyd, in "Speedy," continues to draw big business.

"Laugh, Clown, Laugh," at Loew's State, and "Sunrise," now playing at popular prices at the Criterion, played to satisfactory attendance.

Chicago

ALTHOUGH some improvement has been noticed generally in Chicago theatre business since Easter, practically all the small and medium sized houses and some of the de luxe neighborhood theatres continue to complain of mid week attendance, full houses being exceptional except on Saturday and Sunday.

The Chicago did a normal business with "The Enemy" as its screen feature and usual stage and musical show. At McVickers, "The Legion of the Condemned" went into its last week and held up fairly well.

"Speedy" continued to do good business at the Roosevelt, and at the Oriental, where Paul Ash's engagement is rapidly drawing to a close, his "Jazz Minstrels of 1928" and "Three Sinners" pulled strongly.

"Sorrell and Son" continued to pull well at United Artists theatre and accounted for a satisfactory week.

Average business was reported at both the Granada and Marbro theatres, the former offering "The Play Girl," Vitaphone, and Charles Kaley's stage band, the latter "Why Sailors Go Wrong," Vitaphone, and Benny Meroff.

The Capitol had Gilda Gray on the screen in "The Devil Dancer" and in person, Del Lampe and his orchestra, Vitaphone and Movietone News, the combination going over big.

"The Patent Leather Kid," plus Benny Kreuger and his band in "Tick-Tock," accounted for fair business at the Tivoli, and the Uptown, with the same feature, combined with Frankie Masters and his band, had a satisfactory week.

St. Louis

TOM MIX and his celebrated horse, Tony, was the big attraction at the St. Louis theatre, Grand and Delmar boulevards, and as a result, everything considered, the theatre enjoyed one of the best weeks in a very long time.

The film stars were given a big reception in St. Louis. On Monday at the aviation field in Forest Park thousands of school children gathered to see Mix and his horse and to participate in various contests that had been arranged. Tom also held a reception for exhibitors at the St. Louis F. B. O. exchange during his stay.

"Simba," Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's pictorial travelogue of a lion hunt in Africa, enjoyed a nice week's business at the American theatre. The musical accompaniment for this picture was furnished by a panatrope.

"The Crowd," at Loew's State, proved very good entertainment and enjoyed a good week, considering general conditions at this season of the year.

At the Missouri, Adolphe Menjou, in "A Night of Mystery," was the screen attraction. It enjoyed but an average week.

The Ambassador theatre put on a "Take a Chance Week" and thousands did. One local critic was unkind enough to compliment Skouras Brothers for keeping the name of the screen feature a dark secret, but Eddie Lowry and his stage show proved enough to make a visit to the house worth while.

San Francisco

WARNER BROS.' "The Jazz Singer" continues to break records at the Embassy theatre, being in its tenth week. This is the first time a motion picture has ever played for that length of time in San Francisco and it is reported that this film will be held for still another week.

M-G-M's "Laugh, Clown, Laugh" and a pleasing presentation drew very well all week at Loew's Warfield and the Granada also reported excellent business with "Easy Come, Easy Go" and an imitation Paul Ash act. It is said that many of the customers were disappointed on not finding the former San Francisco maestro there in person and some voiced their opinion that the advertising was misleading.

Harold Lloyd's "Speedy" let down somewhat in its second week at the California, and one reason advanced was that many consider that a poor musical program is being offered at this house. Neither did "The Patent Leather Kid" fare so well in its second week at the St. Francis theatre, and it is claimed that San Franciscans are getting fed up on war pictures.

The Union Square reported excellent trade with "Chicago After Midnight," "Pretty Clothes" and five acts of vaudeville. The feature, "Rich Men's Sons" was also popular at the Golden Gate, which also included vaudeville.

In the residential theatres, "Legionnaires in Paris," "A Sailor's Sweetheart," "Sorrell and Son" and "The Forbidden Woman" all did very well.

Dallas

RECEIPTS at the Dallas theatres were only fair the past week, although all first run houses managed to show a little profit for the week.

The Melba, showing Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer" for the third week, showed good receipts for the last seven days, and the last night still had them coming. The three week's run showed a nice profit and did much to establish the Melba with the theatre goers.

"Gateway to the Moon," with Dolores Del Rio, at the Majestic, enjoyed a good gross for the week, and Little Mitzi, heading the vaudeville, proved a good attraction.

At the Palace "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," with Lon Chaney, did not get the usual Palace crowds, and business for the week was only fair. The title of the picture helped keep business down.

"We Americans," with Patsy Ruth Miller and George Sidney, did not get the expected business, although it was well advertised, and receipts for the seven-day run were only fair.

At the Old Mill, "Ladies' Night at a Turkish Bath," with Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill, and "The Lovelorn," with Molly O'Day, Sally O'Neil and Larry Kent, brought average business.

"West Point," with William Haines and Joan Crawford, and "The Big City," with Lon Chaney, brought a good week's business to the Arcadia, which is not unusual.

Milwaukee

ANOTHER week of average business was enjoyed by Milwaukee theatres this past week. The weather was ideal for good picture business.

The Wisconsin offered "The Big City" and found results from this showing exceedingly satisfactory.

"Speedy" was very popular at the Merrill and is being held over for a second week.

"We Americans" did moderately well at the Alhambra. "The Whip Woman," at the Strand, was accorded fair patronage.

"If I Were Single" was the feature at the Garden and was very well attended. The two vaudeville houses, the Orpheum and the Majestic, enjoyed unusually good patronage. "Skyscraper" was the photoplay feature at the Orpheum and "Her Summer Hero" was offered at the Majestic.

Neighborhood theatres found business slightly accelerated this last week. "French Dressing" was featured at the Garfield, Uptown, and Tower theatres and drew very well. "Baby Mine" found favor with patrons of the Colonial. "The Joy Girl" was fairly well attended at the Oriental.

Ottawa

MORE than ordinary interest was aroused in various film presentations in Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of April 23 because of the coincidental observance of Empire Shopping Week in Canada, with which the features were tied.

"Sorrell and Son" was the attraction at the Regent theatre, Ottawa, and Manager Ray Tubman reported that it had enjoyed practically as much business as "Ben Hur," the record-holder for the house.

"The Battles of Coronel and Falkland Islands" at the Centre theatre was particularly linked up with the Empire Week in special exploitation and the result was very satisfactory to Manager Don Stapleton.

Never before was there such a line-up in front of B. F. Keith's theatre as there was for the first day of the Saturday-opening policy, when "Old Ironsides" was the feature attraction. Incidentally, the change involved increased prices, but the street line-up extended for 100 yards. There was big patronage all week.

The Imperial theatre continued its upward trend with "The Enemy," starring Lillian Gish, and this house had one of its best weeks in years. The unusual anti-war theme of the picture aroused wide comment, but no objections were raised.

The neighborhood houses all packed them in with appropriate features. "Outlaws of Red River" brought all the patronage to the Columbia theatre that it could stand, while "After Midnight," starring Norma Shearer, was a popular hit at the Fern theatre. Monte Blue, as "The Brute," was seen and appreciated by capacity crowds at the Rex theatre.

Manager Donat Paquin offered plenty at the Laurier theatre, Hull, Quebec, and secured plenty as a result. The bill included "The Heart of a Follies Girl," "Sharpshooters," and the "Beauty Parlor" series—the patrons got their money's worth.

Cleveland

THIS was an average week at the local theatres. There were no high spots of a sensational character. Neither was there a single flop. Business, on the whole, was fairly good for a week of bad weather.

"Laugh, Clown, Laugh" was undoubtedly one of the outstanding pictures of the week. It played at the Allen to discriminating audiences and did satisfactory business. "Dressed to Kill" went over big at Keith's Palace. Underworld pictures are very popular in this locality right now, and this one received the approval of the populace. "The Patent Leather Kid" brought its two weeks' engagement at the Stillman to a close. It was consistently popular with the public during the entire run.

"Circus Rookies" made the State theatre echo with laughter all week. Business was highly satisfactory.

"Wings" continued to play to good houses at the Colonial, where it is being shown at $1.65 top. "The Siren," strong melodrama, played to very big houses, local interest being keenly awakened by the personal appearance of Peaches Browning as the feature vaudeville attraction.

Keith's East 105th Street theatre played to very nice business with a clever mystery play, "13 Washington Square," as the feature. The Park had nice business with a first-run neighborhood showing of "Red Hair," while the Cameo played to a satisfactory business with a continued engagement of "Speedy," which was its third week downtown.

Neighborhood business was decidedly poor, according to neighborhood theatre owners, and legitimate theatre competition was just average.

Salt Lake City

BOX office receipts at the downtown picture theatres of this city averaged fairly good this past week. A week of cool early spring made weather conditions favorable.

A very good week was had at the Capitol theatre, the picture having been Richard Dix in "Easy Come, Easy Go," and the stage presentation being Fanchon and Marco's "Jungle Idea." Both of these attractions proved to be big drawing cards.

The Paramount Empress had fairly good results during the presentation of Adolphe Menjou in "A Night of Mystery," and above the average business was reported at the Victory, by Manager Hendry, during the picture presentation "The Heart of a Follies Girl," starring Billie Dove.

Laura LaPlante and Glenn Tryon, in "Thanks for the Buggy Ride," was shown at the American theatre with only fair results, while Marie Prevost, in "A Blonde for a Night," is reported to have gone over to crowded houses.

"Beau Sabreur" was shown as a second run at the Rialto theatre with satisfactory results.

"The Naked Truth," at the Hub, has been held over for a week, it is reported.

The Towers theatre, a neighborhood house, featured "Sorrell and Son" during the fore part of the week with very good business being the result.

The Pantages theatre picture offering during the past week was Lon Chaney, with Betty Compson, in "The Big City," and the attendance was very good.

Albany and Troy

LAST week, in Albany, was one characterized by good business at practically all of the first run houses, the outstanding feature being the excellent business done by the Mark Strand, with "The Crowd." While this picture came to Albany unheralded, it pleased so much on the opening day that it was quickly noised around town and each day brought an increased number of patrons. The fact that the theatre also showed some excellent views of the Bremen and the German aviators no doubt played a part in bringing long waiting lines to the theatre each night. The two Vitaphone presentations did not measure up to expectations and contributed but little to the evening's enjoyment. The two presentations included Montagu Love and the Florentine choir.

"King of Kings," which came to the Capitol for a week's run at prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.65, panned out exceptionally well. Although all of the theatres suffered to some extent on Monday night, due to a severe rainstorm, "King of Kings" played to capacity, the entire house having previously been sold out to the City Club. There was a slight drop on Tuesday, but the remainder of the week picked up fast and the picture did capacity business.

The Capitol is given over mainly to the legitimate, although "Simba" will be shown next week and "Wings" has been booked for September.

The Leland went over exceptionally well with Elinor Glyn's "Mad Hour." The house was crowded to its doors each night and, as usual, with any of Elinor Glyn's productions, the matinees were heavy. The Mark Ritz did not do anything to brag about with "The Love Mart." The Clinton Square theatre in Albany is showing a wonderful response these days to first run double features, and last week, with "Square Crooks" and "Lightning," the house played to capacity business. One theatre in Albany, in speaking of business generally, stated that a comparison between last Friday night's receipts and those of a Saturday night on the corresponding week a year ago, showed a considerable increase.

Proctor's Grand is also playing up its picture part of the program these days, with the result that "The Silver Slave" contributed its full share and more to the program of entertainment. Harmanus Blecker Hall, in Albany, is still packing them in with a combination of vaudeville and pictures.

The neighborhood houses in Albany report business as being satisfactory, such theatres as the Paramount reporting that business has shown a considerable improvement during the last week or so.

In the neighboring city of Troy, "Old Ironsides," while playing to good business, did not come up to expectations. The picture had a handicap the fore part of the week by a couple of rainy days, both Sunday and Monday being characterized by weather that simply kept the people indoors. During the last part of the week, "The Heart of a Follies Girl" ran to just fair business.

The Lincoln did well with "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" for the first part of the week, but not so good with "Flying Romeos" the latter part. The American used "Their Hour" the first part of the week, and "Skinner's Big Idea" the last of the week with fair success.

Cincinnati

THE past seven days in Cincinnati might well be termed "Hold Over Week," so many pictures having been held over from the previous week.

Norma Talmadge, in "The Dove," in the final week, kept up the good attendance record previously established at the Capitol, where Movietone and the Vitaphone are now additional features to the regular program.

Harold Lloyd, in "Speedy," at the Lyric, terminated the engagement after being held over, and the takings for the final week showed that the extension of the run was fully justified.

The Albee, with "The Smart Set," aided and abetted by elaborate stage presentations, enjoyed another of its justly prosperous weeks.

Mary Pickford, in "My Best Girl," another holdover, at Keith's, did not hold up quite as well as during the early part of the engagement.

The Walnut, with "Love Hungry," had a fairly prosperous week. The days of this house are numbered, and it will close within a fortnight.

The Strand, with "Stand and Deliver," had a fairly successful week, as did also "South Sea Love" at the Family, first half, and "Million Dollar Mystery," last half.

The Palace, combination vaudeville and pictures, did a big business, but the legitimate houses complain of a decided slump in patronage, despite the excellence of their attractions.

Des Moines

AT the Des Moines the Vitaphone proved its popularity again by holding over "The Jazz Singer" for a full two weeks' run. It was planned to hold it for two weeks, as advertised, but it was not expected that the theatre would run out the second week with capacity houses as it did. Many people came to see it the second time. At the Capitol theatre the world premier of "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," with Lon Chaney, suffered. The tragic endings of his pictures are thought to have affected his popularity. "The Big Parade," coming for its third showing at the Strand theatre, did a tremendous business and it was considered to play it for the full week. "Tillie's Punctured Romance," which was played on the previously arranged schedule there, did poor business. It started well, but flopped as soon as the word got around. At the Garden, "Damaged Goods" starved to death. The Drake Relays helped the weekend business regardless of what was on.

Baltimore

PATRONAGE at the first-run moving picture theatres here was curtailed very much during the week beginning Monday, April 23, by the heavy rainstorms which occurred on Monday, Friday and Saturday. Coming on the three biggest days of the week, they made the receipts of the theatres drop off considerably.

However, at three houses business was excellent despite that fact, holding up on the rainy nights very well considering the downpour.

The three included Loew's Century, with "The Divine Woman," featuring Greta Garbo and Lars Hanson with a stage presentation entitled "Nick-Nacks"; Warners' Metropolitan, where Vitaphone dialogue and musical accompaniment in "Tenderloin" held forth for its second week, with Dolores Costello and Conrad Nagel and other Vitaphone attractions on the bill; and at Loew's Valencia, where Harold Lloyd's latest starring vehicle, "Speedy," proved a big favorite with the public. "Speedy" was aided also by extra large advertising space in the newspapers previous to the showing.

Business at the Stanley with "Partners in Crime," and a presentation act entitled "Sky Blues," was very good.

"The Satin Woman," starring Mrs. Wallace Reid, proved a good puller at the Keith-Albee New Garden with eight acts of high class vaudeville.

"Cyrano de Bergerac," the French production in colors, proved a good attraction at the Little theatre during its second week there. "A Woman's Way" proved a fairly good attraction at Keith's Hippodrome, with five acts of Keith-Albee family time vaudeville.

"Kreimhilde," the Ufa production, was presented at the Lyric for one night on Wednesday and pulled very good.

"Square Crooks" proved a poor business getter at the New theatre, with a stage act including 'Fluerette Joeffrie, 18, who has a beautiful voice and looks to match.

"The Little Firebrand," featuring Lou Tellegen, went over fairly well at the Palace, where burlesque is shown on the same bill, but "The Vamping Venus," at the Rivoli, with Charlie Murray and Louise Fazenda, did not go so well, with Howard Emerson and his orchestra doing their stuff on the stage.

Tampa

NOTHING very startling in the way of business the past week. The Victory again leads the field with their Vitaphone and Movietone presentations. The feature was "Across the Pacific" and the Movietone newsreel with the opening of the baseball season. Very good show and very good business.

"Ramona" failed to pull the usual Sunday business for the Tampa, but business picked up daily for the four days' run. The first pictures of the Bremen landing on Greenly Island were added to the program on Tuesday and they added to the draw. For the last half, "Partners in Crime" was featured and it did very good. This comedy team, Beery and Hatton, are clicking nicely with Tampa fans.

The Strand had an average week. "Lady Raffles" for two days, "Burning Daylight" for three days, and "That Certain Thing" for two. The Sills picture showed up best at the box office.

The Franklin had an off week with receipts running a little under average. "Alex the Great" and "Under the Black Flag" were first runs, with "The Student Prince" in for a second showing. This theatre is now bringing back one of the big features for a two days' showing each week and in many cases they draw better than the first runs.

Harrisburg, Pa.

ABOMINABLE weather conditions the latter part of the week cut deeply into the business of the Harrisburg theatres, particularly on Saturday, the "big" day, when the city was buried under a belated snowstorm followed by a rain that reduced the snow to slush.

The Colonial theatre, where "The King of Kings" was shown all week, suffered least from the adverse weather conditions because Manager Levy had departed from the usual custom and had held advance seat sales for this spectacle.

Under this plan the house was sold out for the latter half of the week, several days ahead of the bad weather.

"The King of Kings," notwithstanding the prices were advanced to $1.65 for the best seats, did a splendid business all week, and the house was crowded to seating capacity at all performances, whether afternoon or evening.

"Across to Singapore," at Loew's Regent, did splendid business so long as the weather remained good, but suffered on Friday and Saturday. At the Victoria, Pola Negri, in "Three Sinners," had strong popular appeal until the wretched weather interfered with the attendance. At the State the feature film was Ralph Graves in "That Certain Thing," and it proved a fairly strong attraction.

"The Lone Eagle," on a repeat booking for Harrisburg, showed with a fair degree of financial success at the National, while the Broad's offering was Lon Chaney in "The Big City." The Grand feature film was "The Love Mart," with Gilbert Roland, Noah Beery and Billie Dove. Miss Dove has a big following in Harrisburg. The Royal showed Buzz Barton in "The Buckaroo Kid." Tom Mix and Dorothy Dwan, in "Silver Valley," was shown with success at the Russell.

Seattle

AGAIN it was the Fifth Avenue theatre that took a major share of the city's downtown show business last week, with one or two other houses as close runner-ups.

The Fifth Avenue offered a program with several featured stage and screen offerings. First there was Cliff Edwards, "Ukulele Ike," who scored a tremendous hit with his "Follies" specialty. Then came Eddie Peabody, with his pals, Jimmy Maisel and Gogo DeLys, in a series of new offerings. Then there was Fanchon-Marco's "Ship Ahoy" Idea, Walace on the Wurlitzger, and Bee Starr, far-famed aerialist. And as the screen attraction came George Bancroft in "The Showdown." All in all, it was a mighty program that was pleasing to every patron in every regard. Business very big.

Second in the running came the Seattle theatre, with "Old Ironsides" in program show form, and a pleasing Publix stage revue, "Blue Plate." The film was pleasing to the extreme, despite the fact that it was terribly cut to conform to time schedules at a presentation house. Those that had not seen it in road show form enjoyed it, however, and there were many. The act was satisfactory. Business good—better than the previous two weeks.

At the United Artists theatre, "Speedy," in its second week, fell down considerably. The first week was very good, but the second seven days brought the total gross down below what it should have been for an attraction of this calibre. It seems, from experience, that this house would be a big money getter if it played the big pictures on a straight one-week-only policy, with possible road show film exceptions.

"13 Washington Square," at the Columbia theatre, failed to arouse any great excitement among the movie-goers, and played to a fair week only. The same might be said about "Beware of Married Men," which was the attraction at Hamrick's Blue Mouse. This house has not had a big week since "The Jazz Singer" left six weeks ago, and the return of "The Jazz Singer" next week is expected to show an immediate increase in business.

The vaudeville houses both played very good film attractions. "Dressed to Kill," at the Pantages, was a very pleasing picture of its type, and played to fairly good houses. At the Orpheum, "Skyscraper" bolstered up a bill headed by Fannie Ward. The latter film did not get the business that it should have had, due primarily to the fact that it was the first real good picture the Orpheum has played in months, and audiences have been afraid of the films at this house.

"Nameless Men" at the Embassy, "Freckles" at the Winter Garden, and "Share and Share Alike" at the Palace Hip were all secondary attractions that played to fair business only.

"Country Store" Is Held Not Lottery

Adolph Dickson and Frank Ricketson, owners of the Queen and Egyptian theatres of Denver were again victorious in successfully defending their "country store" operations in Denver. This is the second time they have had criminal charges filed against them for alleged violations of the state law prohibiting lottery in Colorado.

The defendant exhibitors were discharged when Judge Julian H. Moore directed a verdict in favor of the exhibitors, it being his belief that the state's case did not constitute a violation of the law within the meaning of the statute,

Last January a directed verdict was also given by Judge Dunklee upon a similar set of facts. It is now believed that the question is settled as far as Denver is concerned.

3 Indianapolis Theatres Bought by R. R. Bair

R. R. Bair, owner of an Indianapolis local chain of houses, has purchased the Uptown, Ritz and Dream theatres in Indianapolis at a consideration of about $750,000.

The deal is one of the largest neighborhood transactions there, and increased the Bair chain to six houses. The Uptown was purchased from the Circle Theatre Company and the Dream and Ritz from Markum and Son, represented by Louis Markum. The deal gives the Bair chain 7,000 seats, making him the largest theatre owner outside of the downtown area.

Complete remodeling and installation of organs, pianos and orchestras planned.

Opinions on Pictures

Glorious Betsy

Excellent Picture, Excellently Told

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ONCE in a while a picture happens along that has sheer romance written all over it. Such a picture is "Glorious Betsy," which tells a charming love story and tells it with fine simplicity, too. It has an atmosphere entirely in keeping with Dolores Costello's personality. Romances of this type need never go begging while she remains on the screen.

There is a deep well of pathos in this story of Napoleon's brother and the love affair which sprung up between him and the belle of Baltimore. Betsy Patterson was something of a coquette but she became serious when she fell in love with her French tutor only to discover his identity. However, they marry and go to France but Napoleon orders the girl home and has the marriage annulled. After a deal of sentiment (none of which gets out of key) Jerome Bonaparte escapes from France and rejoins his wife.

Such a story as this needed sympathetic treatment. And this is just what it received. Had it been handled with an eye to the sobs it would have become maudlin. Alan Crosland has directed it with fine restraint. The photography is excellent—with all of the backgrounds in good taste. The Vitaphone accompaniment is much more satisfying than with the previous Costello film, "Tenderloin."

Drawing Power: Title and appeal of star should attract them. Suitable for any type of house. Exploitation Angles: Feature as romance of Napoleon's brother and Baltimore girl. Play up the costumes. Feature as star's most romantic picture.

THEME: Romance.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Length, eight reels. Released, April, 1928. The Cast: Dolores Costello, Conrad Nagel, Betty Blythe, Pasquale Amato, Marc MacDermott. Director, Alan Crosland. Story by Rida Johnson Young. Scenario by Anthony Coldeway.

Across to Singapore

An Average Picture, Fairly Good Action

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A GOOD, old-fashioned tang of the deep is carried in this title—which might suggest much nautical action of the "shanghai" brand. But it behaves itself pretty well even if it doesn't release the realism anticipated. Had it been cast in its central role with someone less the romanticist than Ramon Novarro it might have struck more melodramatic chords. But Ernest Torrence is present—and the story keeps going. It couldn't do otherwise.
